Blaine In New York. Blaine made a journey up the Hudson and Mohawk valleys through the State of New York last Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 24th and 25th. All along the route people turned out by thousands and tens of thousands to welcome the foremost statesman of America. At Yonkers, Albany, Utica, (the home of Conkling) Herkimer, Syracuse, Auburn and Buffalo immense crowds greeted the Republican stand ar d cheerer for the next President. At Syracuse he remained over night and witnessed a great torch light demonstration. James G. Blaine is the most popular man in America to-day, and will be elected by an overwhelming majority. Where ever Blaine and Logan go they receive a continuous ovation, while the Democratic candidates receive but little attention. Blaine and Logan are now almost certain to receive the electoral votes of New York, and, in any event, their election is as sure as any future event can be.

Wheat In England. Wheat is so low even in England that many farmers say they will feed their grain to stock rather than sell it at present prices. If this is so in England what ought farmers to do here? Meats are very high throughout our northwest in comparison with the price of wheat. Naturally one of the significant facts attending the low price of wheat in Great Britain is a steady decline in the value of land. Large estates sell for much less than they would have commanded a few years ago, and the decline is so marked as to command the attention of politicians and economists throughout Europe. The possession of lands has been regarded in the past in England as the test of a gentleman. Great bankers, merchants and manufacturers possessing hereditary wealth, and with incomes greatly exceeding and derived from the possession of land, have never ranked in England even with the poorer owners of the soil to whom it had been transmitted through inheritance and descent. That fact has given to land a fictitious or imaginary value of which it is being shorn by the hard laws of finance and trade now assuming sovereignty throughout the world.

Blaine is a thorough-blood American. He believes in America. He rejoices in her progress and prosperity. He predicts her greatness. He is sure of her ability to maintain her place among the great powers of the earth. He announces a policy that will extend her commercial as well as political influences. He is no croaker. He does not go about whining that we are in danger of losing our liberties; that we are drifting toward a dangerous centralization; that we are becoming intolerably corrupt, and that as a nation we are threatened with insolvency of public character. He knows better. He believes in the robust manhood of the American people, in their disposition and ability to pay their debts, guard and preserve their liberties, maintain their reputation for honor and honesty, and build up a nationality that shall surpass all other nationalities, past or present; a nation abundant in resources, happy in their political and religious freedom, and clothed, housed and fed as no other people have been on the face of the globe. - Blaine believes in the people, the American people, and the people believe in him. A wide awake business man of San Francisco, in conversation with a reporter said: "I am sure times will be better within two months. There are now at sea one hundred and fifty vessels destined for San Francisco, Portland and Sound ports. There must have cargoes and will put several millions of dollars in circulation, of which Oregon will receive her proportion. Then after the election is over and Blaine inaugurated, I look for four years of unprecedented prosperity. I have witnessed a goodly number of Presidential election and my observation has been, that just preceding a Presidential election, times were duller." An exchange says: "In these days a girl will take about twenty thousand pieces of silk, of all shades, shapes and sizes, and put them all neatly together, and then embroider dainty birds and blushing flowers, and ribboned tamborines, and all sorts of exquisite little conceits upon it. And after this she lines it with sky-blue satin and puts a luxurious cord around the edge, and when all this aesthetic object is finished it is called a crazy quilt. The quilt is all right - it's the girl that crazy."

Mrs. Garfield, the mother of the late President, can be seen almost any day walking about the grounds or sitting in her arm chair on the shaded veranda at Mentor. On Sunday she is frequently at church with other members of the family, and is able to take a seat in, or alight from, the family carriage with little assistance. She has passed her eighty-third birthday, and seems to be in the enjoyment of her usual good health. China possesses the longest bridge in the world. It is at Lagang, over an arm of the China sea, and is five miles long, built entirely of stone, 70 feet high, with a roadway of 70 feet wide, and has 300 arches. The parapet is a balustrade, and each of the pillars, which are 75 feet apart, supports a pedestal on which is placed a lion, 21 feet long, made of one block of marble.

John Kelly: A weaker man than Hancock is running against a stronger man than Garfield. There is kicking against Cleveland in the South as well as in the North. Colonel John S. Swan, an ex Confeder ate Colonel of West Virginia, is out in a card announcing his reasons for supporting Blaine and Logan. Heretofore the Colonel has boasted of being an unrecruited rebel and a Bourbon of the first water, but he cannot stomach Cleveland's nomination, or the party platform. He arraigns the Democratic members of Congress for refusing to put our navy on a footing with those of other countries, and says that they are neither statesmen, patriots, nor men endowed with common sense. He also denounces Democratic opposition to a Protective Tariff, and calls upon his army comrades and the young men of the South to come out and take a stand in defense of the principles advocated by the Republican party. In closing his letter Colonel Swan declares that the Democratic party of to-day is not the party of twenty-five years ago, and says that the Republican party has become the Whig party of old under a different name. He eulogizes Blaine as a fearless and just man, endowed with those "large views that mark the statesman above all technicalities." - Cleveland Leader.

Shaw, a Colorado surveyor, reports that he and his party of surveyors have found almost a solid mountain of alum over a mile square, some of the cliffs of which rise to an elevation of 700 feet above the level of the Gila river. Most of the alum is in an impure state, tasting very strongly of sulphuric acid. Some of the cliffs show immense quantities of almost pure, marketable alum. In Utah, not far from this mountain of alum, is a mountain of rock salt and a bed of sulphur thousands of acres in extent. Fred. Schwatka Strang, recently appointed to represent Oregon in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, has passed a creditable examination for entrance, and is now a cadet midshipman under the instruction of the United States. And now they say West Virginia is likely to go Republican. It begins to look as if the Republican pole was going to knock all the permissives with it.

The following account of a strange suicide appears in the late New Orleans dispatches: S. D. Hale was a well educated and cultivated negro, who served for a time on the police force in this city, and afterward in the Custom House. He was a man of family, of good character, a Christian church member, and well esteemed. He had a good wife and two sons. For the last few months he had been afflicted with sickness, which he felt to be incurable. He thought he was becoming a burden to his family. Last night he posted himself at the side of the track of the Illinois Central road beyond the station. An excursion train drew out of the station, and as soon as the engine had passed, Hale got down on his knees and laid his neck on the rail. The car wheels passed over it, and in an instant it was decapitated. His head rolled between the rails and the trunk fell back into the ditch. The conductor found on his person a note saying: "This is no accident. Please do not stop the men from their work if it can be helped." The considerate suicide knew it was the custom of the police to arrest employes of railroad trains in where persons are run over and hold them until the court re-views them of responsibility, a hardship which he sought to avoid for them. It was found later that Hale had left in the family Bible a letter addressed to his wife, explaining in touching language the purpose of his suicide.

Will you be kind enough, sir, to hold this ram for me while I open this gate? it is fastened on the inside, and I must climb over." This modest remark was made by a man who was standing at a gate on a lonely road, and it was addressed to a stalwart sailor who had just come up. The only other object visible on the long, straight road was the large black ram, whose massive crooked horns were being held by the man as the two stood quite still in front of the gate. "Why sartily, shipmate," said the obliging tar, as he seized the big horns and relieved the first holder. The latter climbed quickly over the gate. "I thank you very much," he said politely when he got to the other side. "You will be surprised to hear that I never saw that ram before to-day. The brute attracted me about half an hour ago, and we have been tussling together ever since. As long as you stand before him holding his horns he can't hurt you much. Good bye. I hope you will be as lucky in getting away from him as I have been." It is not known what the sailor said. - "Ex."

The number of men who have, in the expression of the street, left the country during the past year, for reasons best known to themselves, is noticeable. To our knowledge none of them are bank cashiers. When an ordinary scrub, without the confidence or respect of the community, leaves the country, it is undoubtedly for the country's good. It is different in the case of a man who has a reliable standing, and has been engaged in many business transactions. In such a case the Montana trip with an indebtedness in the rear, shatters the confidence of business men, and is liable to work a hardship upon poor and struggling but yet honorable men. If one man out of every three was brought back, the example would be a telling one in meditating a similar step. - "Heppner Times."

The muskumps are an extinct species in Maine. Hannibal Hamlin used the last one for fish bait more than twenty years ago. Maine went for reform, but Cleveland does not seem to be mixed up with it.
