The world looks with pity and solici tude to the closing days and hours of . General Grant's life. All view with sympathy the insidious encroachments solicitude. The deep regret that tortures his cloting life is harder to bear than good. William's Ontiment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching, (perticularly at night after getting werm in bed.) note as a poultice, gives instant relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and for nothing less soul, succumbe to disease and in less soul, succumbs to disease and it. Rend what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry tortued with recollections that he gave of the leveland was about Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment: I have used scores of Pile trees, and it affords me pleasure practises. The old soldier wishes he could live to redeem his name from financial dishonor and repay all who lost because of confidence in him.

But the world is more lenient to Grant than he is to obtain himself. I recognizes his want of business judg ment palliates his wish to see his son's fortunes advanced. They sunk all they had-and they had almost princely fortunes with their wives -and to that extent they had redeemed their rep

Death, that comes with time and fullness of years is not to be regretted

It takes many in their prime, when their usefulness weems at its best; and even then we need not sindder at it coming. But death under such circumstances as attack General Grant se ms too dreadful to contemplate. In view of his great suffering and his sin cere regret for all that he can be blamed with, history will still henor his name and his fears that his memory will be unhappily clouded will not be seriously realized.

Ben Simpson's Marriage.

We take the following extract from the Washington correspondence of the "Welcome:" "While I'm in the story Aelling business, I may just as well re-Jate how Ben Simpson captured his last wife. Everybody knows Ben Simpson, the postal agent, for he lived in this city a number of years, and his name is as familiar as the poetry of his gifted sen, Sam. Mr. Simpson went South, to Georgia, where he entered upon his postal duties and joined the church. He became a good member and was to be found regularly every Sunday in his pew, Ben had not been long in the Sunny South before he was called upon to investigate the affairs of a country postmaster who had committed some irregularity. Among others upon the bonds of this unworthy official was a handsome widow who possessed a fortune worth several kun dred thousand dellars. She was ade scendent of the celebrated Morgans one of the oldest familise in the South, and to her belonged some of the richest and largest plantations in Georgia and Alabama. Mr. Simpson was obliged to call upon her 'officialy,' and before he left the house the widow had found her kismet. She became smitten with Ben almost instantly, and he of course fortune will be pleasant news to his many friends and accquaintances."

Struck it Rich.

An important discovery has recently been made which adds another feature to Oregon's great resources. A large and apparently inexaustible body of coal was found last Fall within 100 miles of Portland, samples of which were sent East for analysis. Reports received yesterday pronounced it anthracite coal. Geologists have conten ded that no such coal existed in this part of the world: that the coal here was lignite and that ages of time would have to pass' before it would become anthracite. The fact of its discovery, however, proves that in one case the geologists are in error, C. D. Folger, of this city, has large interests in this new bonanza from which millions are expected .- "Standard."
