A Stolen Bill.

The Legislature of Oregon is cursed at every session with a mob of professional politicians whose business is anything that involves no hard work. No matter how dirty the job they are in for it. You will see men who are comfortably fixed and have pleasant homes in the distant parts of the state, coming down there at the beginning of the session and lying around to pick up a piece on every proposition that comes up. They prate very loudly of their "inflooence," and want $100 at least for it, or they will kill the bill. If they don't get that they will keep on holding out their hands behind their backs till they get something, if it is only $20. Many of these disreputable fellows are

EX MEMBERS FROM RURAL DISTRICTS,

Whose constituents have found them out early in the game and declined to return them for a second term in the forum. Sometimes they are men who have formerly served as legislative clerks and become familiar with all the routine of desk work; and this enables them to steal bills in transit from the engrossing department to the chief clerk's desk, or from that desk to the committee room. At all events, they always stand ready to help parties in defeating needed legislation. About fifteen years ago a certain bill came up to increase the compensation of a certain state officer. It was a house bill that was so amended in the senate as to cut off much of the proposed steal. The interested party went to the engrossing clerk of the house and had it copied without the senate amendments, and the chairman of the engrossing committee rose in his seat and reported the bill properly engrossed. When the bill came up it passed the House under supervision of the rules, and was held back till the last day of the session, when it was rushed through the senate, under supervision of the rules, and cost the state $7,500 extra in the four years that followed. The writer of this article was engrossing clerk of the senate and was approached by the interested party with a liberal reward; and you can judge of the briber's countenance when he was told that he had come to the wrong shop, for it was not a senate bill.

THE LATEST OPERATION.

In rascality of this sort is the stealing of House Bill No 190, introduced Feb 16th by the Hon. Mr. Beall, of Jackson county, and entitled "An act to facilitate the transportation of freight." The bill provided that at any warehouse on any railroad line, containing 300 tons of freight, when the grading was done and the ties were laid for a side track without cost to the railroad company, said company should be required to lay the iron, provide switches, etc., for such side track and furnish cars for the removal of freight from that point. A penalty of $250 a week for each week's failure or refusal to comply with this law, was attached. This bill, after being referred to the committee on transportation and reported back favorably, passed the house on the night of the 18th by a vote of 48 ayes to 4 nays. It was transmitted to the senate on the night of its passage and came up for consideration on the following day, passing that body by the overwhelming vote of 20 yeas to 6 nays. The original bill and the engrossed bill were discovered with the amendments, but the enrolled bill, signed by the officers of the two houses and the Governor, could not be found. There all trace of it ended.

MR. BEALL'S INDIGNATION

When informed that there was no such law on file in the archives of the state department, knew no bounds. He came from Jacksonville to Salem at once, having first stopped at Corvallis and brought over Speaker Kealy with him. They called on Governor Moody and stated the object of their visit, when the governor was very much astonished about it. He was sure, however, that he had not signed the bill. Mr. Beall, however, was sure that he had signed it, because, being specially interested in it, and having worked hard for it, he had followed it its various meanderings, and knew that besides passing both houses it had been signed and become a law. His Excellency, as is stated, then admitted that possibly he had signed the bill, but that among so many it could not be expected that he should remember all. Now this is a very puerile answer to come from a man like Governor Moody, if he really did say so. The governor's duty, during the progress of every legislative session, is to notify each house of the signing of each and every bill, presented to him for signature after being correctly enrolled. Messages from the governor are about the last things read on the night of adjournment; and if House Bill 190 did not receive the approval of the governor, there will be found a message on the minutes of each house announcing that he had signed it. If this was neglected Governor Moody owes the people of this state either an apology or his resignation.

A VERY PLAIN DUTY

Devolves upon Governor Moody and Secretary Earhart in this matter, if they see fit to perform it. They can have a copy made of the engrossed bill and have it compared and signed by the president of the senate and speaker of the house. The governor can then sign it, and the citizens of Jackson county can then bring a test case for adjudication before the supreme court. If that is not done there will always be a certain amount of odium sitting upon the chairman of the house committee on enrollment, who carries the enrolled bills to the governor for approval; or upon the office of the secretary of state, whither bills are sent after signature. But, in our belief, the existence of a message on the house minutes, showing that Governor Moody had approved house bill 190, would be sufficient justification for the course pressaged above. And whether the supreme court subsequently affirmed or denied the validity of a law so issued, the governor and secretary could clear their skirts of an unjust imputation by such a course; and they owe such a course as a duty to the people by virtue of their official oaths. They cannot afford to shirk the responsibility with such a dilemma overhanging them.—Portland "Sunday Mercury."

Crop Prospects.

Mr. Heron, Secretary of the Indiana State Board of Agriculture, after a careful personal examination and inquiry, says the wheat in that State has not come out as was expected early in the spring. He thinks the total crop in that State will show a falling off of nearly 20,000,000 bushels from the average for the past four or five years. The farmers, however, early recognized this danger, and made extra exertions to put in a large corn crop, which already promises a fine yield. In many portions of the State the wheat fields were plowed up and planted in corn. While the farmers of Oregon and Dakota take advantage of mishaps to winter sown wheat by increasing the acreage of spring sown wheat, in the Ohio and Mississippi river valleys similar disasters to wheat have to be made good by an increased crop of corn. For several years past the cultivation of corn has been fully as profitable as the cultivation of wheat and the demand for it quite as reliable. It also has the advantage of constituting better food for stock, and consequently when not easily marketed as grain, rarely fails to bring good prices when marketed as meat.

The now recognized shortage in the wheat crop of the Eastern and Central States, will certainly result to the advantage to the farmers of the Northwest, especially as the crop in California has also been materially damaged by drouth. So far as indications may be relied upon, the crops of Oregon and Washington Territory will be immense, and with reduced freightage already assured by the railroads, and reduced competition for ocean transportation by the diminished demand for vessels on the part of California, it does seem as though for one season at least, the farmers of Oregon are to have things pretty much their own way. The effect of this promising outlook will soon be realized by an improvement in every part of business. Added to other advantages the fine rains of the past two weeks will insure them excellent pasturage for stock during the remainder of the season, and in addition to harvesting a fine hay crop to carry them through the next winter.

Etiquette on the Road.

For the past twenty years, as occasion required, I have used a buggy on the road. During this time I have often wondered how people, who are "well trained" and as polite as can be everywhere else, can act as they frequently do on the highway. They seem to think that the old toll gate suggestion, "Keep to the right, as the law directs," is all there is of it. I have seen persons meet when the dust was deep and as fine as flour, and being blown to one side by the wind, so completely cover the occupants of the vehicle on the unlucky side that they were hardly recognizable; when, had they driven out to one side, or slackened their pace, or even stopped a few seconds, the people in the other vehicle could have passed without discomfort. Besides, they would have done a courteous act, which would have been remembered by those to whom it was shown. These thoughtless people are all right everywhere else, and if the same ladies they so unmercifully dust on the road were but to drop a fan or handkerchief, they would risk breaking their necks, or a suspender, in their hurry to pick it up. There is no law but the law of politeness that says "Turn out for loaded teams;" but the driver of the loaded team will appreciate it, if you will do it.—"Planter and Stockman."

The Secret of Breeding Race-Horses.

[Bell's Life.]

While the purchasers of Lord Falmouth's mares must be thinking of what they must do in the future, it may not be amiss to say a few words respecting the great success that has attended the Cornish nobleman as a breeder of blood stock. It is admitted on all sides that his success in this department has been unrivalled, and that even the achievements of Sir Joseph Hawley and Mr. Merry cannot be compared with the efforts of the noble lord during the period he has devoted to the rearing of race-horses. It is my purpose to say something on the theory practised by Lord Falmouth, which perhaps explains more than anything his unexampled success.

The late Dr. Shorthouse always demanded as a sine qua non in the production of a really first-class racer that the stout and really excellent blood should preponderate on the side of the dam, and for a stud-horse vice versa, i. e., that the stouter blood should be on the sire's side. On this principle has Lord Falmouth acted, and by means of this principle all his greatest successes may be explained. The tap-roots of the now scattered Mereworth stud are Silverhair, Hurricane, and Queen Bertha, and all three were racers of some merit. These mares, it should be noticed, were very stoutly bred, and their stout blood largely predominated on the dam's side, and this is a desideratum in a brood mare, although a great drawback and preventive of success in a sire.

I have no space in the present article, but will some time endeavor to show that where male members of a certain family have been great failures at the stud, as in the cases of King Tom, Stockwell, Rataplan, Melbourne, Orlando, etc., whose sons were mostly conspicuous failures, their daughters were, on the contrary, great successes. On the other hand, the sons of Newminster, as a rule, did very well at the stud, but very few of his daughters produced animals of any merit. Excellence of blood is maintained in the female line for a considerable length of time, and to this is due the success which has attended Lord Falmouth as a breeder.

What the Fans Whisper.

[Boston Times.]

Young girls fan themselves rapidly in church, as if to say: "I'll catch him, I'll catch him, I'll catch him," while matrons are more calm about it, and teach their fans to softly murmur: "I've—got—him, I've—got—him, I've—got—him," while fans in the hands of widows tell the sad story as plainly as possible: "I-v-e l-o-s-t h-i-m, I-v-e l-o-s-t h-i-m, I-v-e l-o-s-t h-i-m."

How It Struck Little Johnny.

[New York Graphic.]

A little boy asked his father the other day, after some Boston people had left, "if Boston people were born grown up."
