The Progress of Envy.

Never be envious. When I was a boy of four I envied the youngster who ate candy all the time, while I had but little. Now that youngster has no teeth and no stomach, so to speak, and I can bite a peach-stone in tw and digest boarding house bread. At eight I envied the boy who always had a cent to spend; he was afterwards sent to the house of correction for robbing his mother of small sums. At ten I envied the boy who didn't have to go to Sunday school; he was drowned one Sabbath for skating, foolish lad, on thin ice.

At eleven I envied the boys who didn't have red hair like mine; I have since learned that my mother loved me just as much, and that my wife imagines that my head is gorgeous—besides, any one can have the ordinary shades of hair, while red is somewhat of a novelty. At twelve I envied the boy who was allowed to read dime novels and police papers; that boy now cannot tell who is President of the United States, never heard of an Abolitionist or of Tammany Hall, and is the umpire of a base ball club, without a friend in the world except his own nine.

At thirteen I longed to be permitted to run the streets "after supper," like the Smith boy; the Smith boy is now a low ward politician of the minority party, has a red nose, but no character. At fourteen I wanted my father to buy a big house, like the dwelling occupied by the Jenkins family; the Jenkins house was soon afterward sold to pay the interest on the first mortgage, but our little house is still in possession of the family. At fifteen I wanted to leave the school behind and go to work; at sixteen I wanted to leave the shop behind and go to back school. At seventeen I envied young Dandy because the girls liked his black eyes and sweet smiles better than any freckled face of which only one girl seemed proud; Dandy was once sued for a breach of promise, and is now in jail for bigamy—I am free, have my byst girl yet, and my freckled-face boy calls her mother.

At eighteen I wanted to put on lots of style like other young fellows, but was held back by pa; I have since learned that the tailors paid tor the garments the other fellows sported, and that the latter now borrow all their tobacco, with no idea of returning it. At nineteen I envied my companions who carried gold watches, but it wasn't long before I had my silver time piece grabbed from me by a pick-pocket; by the operation I saved at least fifty dollars. At twenty I thought I was old encugh to teach my paternal parent how to run his business, and felt jealous of young men in partnership with their pas; when I discovered, however, that the old man was lying awake at night trying to devise a plan to meet a note, I found sleep and comfort in knowing it was his pic nic and not mine.

At twenty-one I wished I had been a voter for ten years, for it was such a grand thing to blow about "my vote," you know; at the end of the year, when the time came for paying out for taxes enough money to buy a new overcoat, I would have been satisfied to have been denied the right of franchise for ten years more. At twenty-two I longed to be a bright paragrapher like Hairbrain; Hairbrain is now in an insane asylum, while I am still able to write up dog fights and slugging matches in the most approved manner. At twenty-three I thought my friend Tenderlung the luckiest fellow in the world, because he had a good business and a beautiful home, while I toiled for a little lucre and lived in a plain cot; Tenderlung is now in Colorado coughing his life away—I am still here and am strong enough to blow the top out of the biggest blowing machine you ever saw. At twenty four I longed to go the Legislature; the fellow that beat me in getting the nomination spent $2000 of borrowed money and was defeated by four votes. At twenty-five I wanted to be rich instead of having to make my hands sore in sissoring extracts for a country weekly; I have since learned that Jay Gould's hands get just as sore cutting off coupons—besides, I am not blackguarded from Dan to Beersheba as he is.

At thirty I felt envious of my old friend Goeasy, who had a wealthy father and did nothing but amuse himself; Goeasy's father lost his fortune in betting on the wrong stock, and Goeasy himself was called a Blainiac every day for seven months. At thirty five I wanted to make a reputation for myself, like a certain silver tongued orator I knew; the silver tongued orator is now separated from his wife and is never heard of. At forty I envied the men who had retired from business and settled down to spend what they had saved; most of the fellows that have retired never know what it is to have a good digestion, and spend yearly for liver and kidney medicine as much as I can earn in that time.

At fifty I have stopped being envious and am satisfied to plod along with a robust stomach, two good suits of clothes, three meals a day, plenty to read, a dear "old woman," with hair just turning gray, a snug little home, no debts, and a contented disposition.

But yet, after all, I would like to scrape together enough extra cash to cash to take a jaunt to Europe and back, like that old upstart and ignoramous Strutabout, who lives in the next block.—"Puck."

WHY GIRLS SHOULD NOT MARRY.—A very young girl is certainly not capable of choosing a husband. She takes it for granted that men are always as she sees them in society—polite, friendly and in good behavior. If she marries early in life the man who happens to please her fancy, she learns to her sorrow that in nine cases out of ten a man at home and a man in society are widely different beings. Five years at that period of life produce a great change in opinions and feelings. We frequently come to detest at 25 what we admired at 16. We advance from the taffy-candy and peanut age to the era of gumdrops and maron glaces, and even in later years to lose our yearnings for those dainties. Similar changes take place in the moral and physical nature. Why should we feel the same toward persons in after life, when we have learned to distinguish between the false and the true, the bad and the good, any more than we should like dime novels after we have become acquainted with Dickens, Thackery and Shakespeare? How few, comparatively, of the school girl friendships extend into later life! How few of our own companions in society do we love as well after twenty years have passed! How few even of our own brothers and sisters in whom we do not see faults we could wish eradicated! Considering all this, how is it possible for one to feel surprised when a couple who marry in their teens grow to love each other less as years roll by? When both grow alike, whether it be rapidly or slowly, backward or forward, there is some hope of their ever seeing each other with the same eyes; but when one progresses and the other retrogrades, a difference springs up between them, and in time one looks down upon the other with a feeling of superiority, perhaps unconfessed, but still there, while the other, unable to perceive the real cause of the trouble, grows to dislike what was once loved. And thus it happens that those who loved at 16 are indifferent at 25, and sometimes divorced at 30. One great cause of early marriages is the pernicious habit of calling a girl who remains unmarried until 25 an "old maid." This is done by many well meaning but thoughtless persons, who would be sorry to think that any act or expression of theirs had ever caused one an hour of misery; yet this very dread of being called an "old maid" has driven more women into marriage and lifelong misery than any other thing, excepting, perhaps, poverty. It is a mistake to think that single life is any less noble than married, especially if the spirit of discord is permitted to inflict its horors upon a whole household.—"Chicago Tribune."

A citizen of Leavenworth, going to his barn to milk in the dark of the early morning, got into the wrong pen, and undertook to milk a mule. He didn't remember what side of the barn he went out at, but expects his bucket down in a few days.

Joseph Spencer, aged 78, was taken from his home in Douglas county, to the insane asylum last week.

THE HIGHWAY EXPLOITS OF WELBUSH ALIAS "THE LITTLE DUTCHMAN."

The San Francisco "Post" of Aug. 18th has the following interesting sketch of a gentlemanly road agent well known to the police fraternity of Nevada a few years ago: A medium sized man, about 26 years of age, with rosy cheeks, clear, gray eyes, having about him a generally peaceful and meek appearance, and wearing a pair of government bracelets, was brought over from San Quentin to-day, in charge of a United States Deputy Marshal. He answers to the names of William Smith and P. C. Welbush, and has just finished a term of five years for robbing Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express on the stage from Milton to Sonora, December 29, 1881, at which time he detained the stage one and a half hours, while trying to break open the box. He also robbed the United States mail, and for this he is now to be tried.

THE COOLEST STAGE ROBBER.

"That's the coolest man I ever saw,' said a deputy marshal this morning as the robber went to sit for his picture, after which he will go to jail to await his trial. "He is ahead of 'Black Bart' a long way, for he is a fighter, and don't know what fear means. His greatest exploit was in June, 1881, when he robbed Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express between Sierraville and Truckee. He wore a mask with but one eyehole, tramped down the brush so that he could see when the stage was coming, took his shot gun, seated himself on a log and awaited further developments. They came first in the shape of a light wagon containing seven men, who drove up from behind Smith before he could get out of sight. He promptly pulled his gun on them, made them get out, take off their coats, surrender weapons, and then lift their wagon to one side, in the brush, where it would be ought of sight of the stage driver. He then made the seven men stand where he could command them with his shooter, and again camly took his seat on the log.

ANOTHER COATLESS RECRUIT.

"A driver and four-horse team came next, and the mule-whacker shared the fate of the others, pulling his team out of sight and joining the group of coatless mourners. Another team came along, and the driver also concluded to mingle with the audience, and got his outfit off the grade.

"The little Dutchman was on hand, cool and collected, and when the stage came up he stopped it, compelled the four passengers to join the gang, while the driver, through the influence of the shotgun, performed the arduous duty of breaking open the treasurer box and mail sacks, and wrapping up the contents in a nice package for the robber. This thrilling performance lasted one hour and a half, during which thirteen men, sixteen horses and four vehicles performed at the muzzle of the little Dutchman's shot gun.

HE GATHERS IN THE COIN.

"The last act closed by the thirteen men being loaded into the stage and started up the road with the admonition that no one should look back before the stage had traveled two miles, unless he wanted to die. The orders were obeyed, and Smith got away with his plunder. In August of same year, in the same locality, he stopped the same driver and again made him open the treasure box. His next robbery was in the December following, which resulted in his arrest by Sheriff Tom Cunningham, of San Joaquin county. This is the crime for which he has just served his term."

Smith was also convicted of stage robbery in Nevada, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment, but was pardoned before serving two years. The United States authorities say there is no possibility of Smith escaping conviction, and that he will receive a life sentence.

His wages at the State Prison have been ten cents per day, out of which he has bought underclothes, tobacco and other luxuries and saved $40.

H. S. Jory, of Salem, will have a fruit dryer in operation at the Mechanics' fair for which preparations are being made. A flue will be built for the smoke-stack of the machine through the roof of machinery hall, and the art of fruit drying will be fully explained.
