unites of political and social life that, however they may conflict with our past conceptions, threaten the exist ence of the present and future good order of society.

Men who have given the subject much thought say that what we see is but the result of over production. Certain it is that much of this present labor agitation is competition reduced to its lowest terms, and is in the direc. tion of the manifest tendency of mankind, certain, soon or late, to become normal to its healthy existence. It is the province of the law, it is the duty of the law, to recognize the existing obtent fact and delimit organized humanity in its relations to individual humanity, and to society as a whole. It is natural to the individual, and to the corporation as well, to fill all the space it can, with the same disregard of the rights of the weak, and with the same greed take whatever it can. The law must set a bound of safety that will come as near justice to all as human experince can.
