Results of Fruit Culture In Southern Oregon.

M. Hr. E. Battin, who does a large business in domestic and imported fruits, handled a great part of the orchard products of Rogue River Valley the past, or rather present season, and spent most of the time for some months in that valley looking after the same. From him we gather some facts concerning the late fruit crop, and also as to his opinion of Southern Oregon in general as a producing region. He puts the apple crop of Rogue River Valley at fully 60,000 bushels, and the producers received an average of fifty cents a bushel for the same on the

Twenty car loads or eight thousand bushels were purchased on California account, of which part yet waits for the opening of transportation on the Oregon and California Railroad. now an accomplished fact, and six thousand bushels in all were handled by different parties; besides, there was more fruit of which no account can be made, so that the total aggregates 60,000 bushels, as above stated

Pears were nearly gone before the buyers got in there, and a great many went to waste, or were eaten by swine. Five carloads were shipped away and twice as many rotted on the ground or were fed to stock, a course that will har ly be pursued again. Pears are grown considerably, but not nearly so extensively as apples. Of grapes there were one hundred acres, and they bore nearly four tons to the acre. Wine making is carried on extensively, because the grapes are not generally good table fruit. Mission grapes are usually found in these vineyards, and they are not well calculated for shipment. Being very juicy, it does well in wine-making.

Peaches are grown somewhat, but the peach orchards of any extent are quite young and not bearing heavily. As an approximation towards correctness, we should put the total shipped away this season at 7000 boxes, of twenty pounds each. Of these, probably one-third were shipped from Medford, and 4000 boxes, or thereabouts, came from Ashland, or that vicinity. This gives some idea of the quantity of fruit that was shipped from that valley in 1887.

Concerning the kinds of peaches to plant, Mr. Battin very sensibly says people in Oregon mistake greatly when be had to the finds of the county have been expended with reckless extravagance, the grand jury, at the last session of the curum court, did recommend that the curum court, did recommend to with crawford and co California Crawfords are gone, and be continue their labors herein, at pleasure, and allow in California or Oregon because later than the same variety grown in that amination of the public records and to continue their labors herein, at pleasure, in thirty days from date thereof and to continue their labors herein, at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in thirty days from date the continue their labors herein at pleasure, in the continue their State. This is so plain a showing that we hope it will be remembered by all who plant peaches.

Mr. Battin says the apricot can not be grown in Southern Oregon in perfection and money trying to grow them. He says Regue river apples are smooth, of good color, and apparently healthy and he considers them more perfect and better keepers usually than Willamette valley fruit. They are good flavor, but smaller in size than Willamette apples, though not so small as to lose value. and the apple and pear succeed on very rich black soil where peaches would be a failure. This bottom or rich bench land he considers reported by the consideration of the consi he considers remarkably good for these hardy fruits.

Mr. Battin went to Josephine county, and fully bears out the opinion heretofore expressed, that the valleys and bench lands on streams there fully equal any were touched by frost and the crop damaged, which has not occurred before in fifteen years or since their orchards have most unlimited quantity of the best of is in its infancy, and must attain im-
