

Exclamatory.
At church I sat within her pew—
Oh, pugh!
But there I heard
No pious word—
Saw alone her eyes of blue;
Saw her bow her head so gracious—
Oh, gracious!
The choir sang,
The organ rang,
And seemed to fill the building spacious.
I could not hear the gospel law,
Oh, La!
My future bride
Was by my side—
I found all else a mighty flaw,
And so when pealed the organ's thunder—
Oh, thunder!
I fixed my eyes
In mute surprise
On her whose beauty was a wonder.
To me the maiden was most dear—
Oh, dear!
Joy too was mine,
Joy too divine
For human words to picture here.
Her love seemed like a prayer to bless me—
Oh, bless me!
Before she came
My life was tame—
My rarest joys could but oppress me.
The service done, we sought the shore—
Oh, shore!
And there we walked
And sadly talked,
More sadly talked than e'er before.
I thought she was a type of goodness—
Oh, goodness!
But on that day
I heard her say
Plain words whose very tone was rudeness
We strolled beyond the tide-mill's dam—
Oh, dam!
She jilted me,
And now I see
That woman's love is all a sham!

NOTES ON AMERICA.—No. 1.

BY J. B. EDWARDS, OF BEDFORD ENGLAND.
AMERICAN FARMING.—America has been styled the granary of Europe; it is, doubtless, the largest corn growing country in the world. It is mainly upon its agriculture that the progress of the country depends; its manufactures are comparatively unimportant, as from three-fourths to seven-eighths of the population are engaged in agricultural pursuits. Although we may learn a good deal on various subjects from our go-ahead kinsmen in the art and practice of agriculture, the old country is in the position of teacher. As might be expected in a comparatively new country, the agriculture, as a rule, is rough, and far behind that of England. That the farming should not have the neat and finished appearance which it presents in England and Scotland is not to be wondered at, when the dearth and scarcity of labor are considered, and when it is remembered how large a number of the cultivators of the soil were not brought up to the business of farming. A very large proportion of the farms in the older States have been reclaimed from the primeval forest; for hundreds of miles the stumps of the larger trees remain in the field, so that the date of the locality can be calculated by the number of stumps still remaining. In the rocky and stony districts the stumps still remain piled up in heaps, the plow and the reaping machine having to tread between these stumps and heaps of stones. The system pursued in clearing the land of timber is as follows: In the fall or autumn the under-wood is cut and piled. In the winter the trees are felled on or toward the stacks of underwood, which are then set on fire. After this, the small stumps are extracted by a crab, worked by oxen or horses; the larger stumps are left to rot. The ground is then plowed, or, as we should think, scratched over. Two or three crops of Indian corn are taken in order to get rid of the second growth of underwood; when it is left in grass until the larger stumps are sufficiently decayed to be extracted. The grass of America has no where the splendid richness of our English pastures. Whether this arises wholly from the climate, I have some doubt. I think want of care in preparing the land, selection of seed, and subsequent stocking have something to do with the miserable condition and appearance of the American pastures. If sheep are pastured on young permanent grasses, a good pasture must not be expected, even in our more humid climate. After having traveled for weeks through this old forest land, with its blackened stumps and zigzag rail fences, or "snake fences," as they are called, to get a view of those grand, open prairie lands is a relief scarcely to be described. In the wooded district the toil of clearing and bringing the land into cultivation is immense. On the prairies the settler has no such labor; he has simply to plow up the ground and sow the seed. The prairie lands are of three kinds, flat, something like our fens, and about as inviting to live in, without in many parts a tree or shrub as far as the eye can reach. Then there are rolling prairies—having a slight undulating surface and some wood—far less monotonous than the flat, but not, to those who have an eye to beauty, so inviting as the high rolling prairies. The most beautiful country for crossing I saw in America was in Iowa, across the Mississippi; indeed, it is one of the most picturesque countries I have ever looked upon. Fine land in this State is to be purchased at less than it would rent for in England; but more on the price of land presently.

This fine State contains 50,000,000 of acres, only 8,000,000 of which are at present under cultivation. The system generally pursued in American farming is one of exhaustion. The evils of this practice are beginning to be felt in the older settled States in the gradually and steadily diminishing yield. There can be no doubt that the evils of such a course will be much more generally and seriously felt unless a change of system be adopted. Rotation is little observed. Root crops, except potatoes, are rarely seen. Crop after crop of corn is taken from the soil without anything in the shape of fertilizers being returned. The bones of the country are either thrown away, or, when collected, are exported. So also of the linseed and cotton crop—as there is very little native demand, they are exported in Europe. The use of manures and feeding stuffs is practiced by a few, but they are quite the exception. An old farmer on the banks of the Wabash, in Indiana, told me he had grown grain crops, generally Indian corn, for 25 years in succession with scarcely a dressing of manure, and that the last crop of Indian corn had yielded no less than 80 bushels an acre. This land, as you may suppose, is exceedingly rich; but, as a shrewd Quaker from Ohio, who joined us about an hour after, remarked, such a course was too common, but that it must come to an end—that he had cleared no less than 600 acres of land himself, had brought up a large family and settled them on farms, and had found it most profitable to keep plenty of stock, to observe a proper rotation and to deal with the soil liberally. The farms are mostly small—averaging about 100 acres. In the western country they are larger, many being 500 to 1,000 acres. One gentleman, Mr. Sullivan, in Illinois, who invited me to go and see him, farms 70,000 acres, and does it systematically and well. A large proportion of the cultivators are what may be described as working farmers—men of rough exterior; but owing to the admirable public school system, they are generally fairly educated. The immense circulation of most of the agricultural journals is a proof that they are a reading people. The larger and more opulent farmers are very gentlemanly and intelligent men; know well what is going on in England—I thought, sometimes, better than some English farmers. There is another, and this a large class in America—I mean amateur farmers. Doctors, lawyers, bankers, merchants, manufacturers—all seemed possessed with the same love for farming so general on this side. I met with many of this class—for the acquisition of land is so easy. I found, however, that they told the same tale amateur farmers do on this side, viz: That farming was a very pleasant occupation, but that it did not pay. The wheat and other cereal crops are much shorter and lighter than we grow in England—I should say fully one-third less—30 bushels of wheat being considered a good crop. Indian corn yields far more—100 bushels to an acre are occasionally raised; but 50 or 60 bushels is considered a fair crop. It is highly prized, is often cut green for fodder, and attains a height of 12 feet. The feed in an acre is something wonderful. It is given to all kinds of stock. I find my own farm horses do well upon the grain.

A USEFUL HINT.—A subscriber at West Farmington writes us as follows: "A tin tube, made like a syphon, driven into the vent of a barrel of wine or cider, and the other end inserted into a vial of water, will prevent the air from entering the barrel, while the gas escapes through the water. Make the barrel otherwise tight. When the cider or wine is done working, the water in the bottle will cease bubbling. It requires no filling up, and there is no loss. I have tried it." We will only add that it can be made by any tin plate worker, and when once made can always be kept for future use.

CLIMBING VINES.—A neat method of supporting climbers, is to take a strip of two-inch plank, two inches wide, planed the full length of the board, and painted green, which set firmly in the ground. Next, obtain iron or wooden-ware or toy store two children's hoops, one the largest and the other the smallest you can find. Now suspend the small one as near the top of the pole as possible, by strings, and fasten the large one close to the ground. Plant your seeds around the outside of the large hoop, and when up, run strings of soft twine regularly from the top to the bottom hoop. It will look better to have the hoops painted green, and the twine should be dark, and not cotton twine.

A CURIOSITY.—A correspondent writes to the Boston Journal that he has made an experiment on the tendrils of a squash vine. The vine is running up a pear tree in the garden. On one side the tendrils were reaching out straight, having nothing to fasten to; he took a stake and stuck it down so that it touched one of the straight ones, and timed its progress by his watch. In two minutes the tendrils passed half around the stake; in seven minutes the tendrils passed once around the stake, and in sixteen minutes it passed twice around. This can be asked by any one.
