He Gentle, Forgiving and Kind.

Oh! why are we always so ready To hear what another may say, To canvass the faults of a neighbor. Forgetting our own, by the way? We know not the heart that we censure; He gentle, forgiving and kind-One drop from the fountain of pity

A word, like an angel of mercy The sunshine of gladness may hear; May cheer a lone spirit forsaken, Or add to the weight of its care, A word! do we think of its import? Though uttered perhaps with a smile,

A heart may be writhing beneath it,

A wound that is bleeding may bind.

Or breaking with anguish the while. A word that in coldness is spoken May sever the friendship of years, The flowers of feeling may wither, And leave them in serrow and tears. Then why should we always be ready To hear what another may say, To canvass the faults of a brother, Forgetting our own by the way?

Noble Sentiment .- "This is an agreeable world, after all.
