If we knew the baby fingers Pressed against the window pane Would be cold and stiff to-morrow-Never trouble us again-Would the bright eyes of our darling Catch the frown upon our brow? Would the print of rosy fingers Vex us then as they do now?

Ah, those little ice-cold fingers, How they point our memories back To the hasty words and actions Strewn along our backward track! How those little hands remind us. As in snowy grace thev lie, Not to scatter thorns-but roses-For our reaping by and by!

Strange we never prize the music Till the sweetavoiced bird has flown; Strange that we should slight the violets Till the lovely flowers are gone; Strange that Summer skies and sunshine Never seem one-half so fair As when Winter's snowy pinions Shake the white down in the air!

Lips from which the seal of silence None but God can roll away Never blossomed in such beauty As adorns the mouth to-day ; And sweet words that freight our memory With their beautiful perfume. Come to us in sweet accents, Through the portals of the tomb.

Let us gather up the sunbeams Lying all along our path; Let us keep the wheat and roses, Casting out the thorns and chaff; Let us find our sweetest comfort In the blessings of to-day, With a patient hand removing All the briars from our way.

worthy of consideration:

A young healthy tree, if left to itself. at first produces only wood. After this first period of vegetation the growth of wood gradually slackens, and the preparation for the production of fruit develops itself. A surplus of sap favors the growth of contra, scantiness of sap increased the production of fruit to the detriment of the growth of wood. In healthy trees, not too old, the sap tends rather to the surface of the stem and branches, than to the interior parts. The branches which shoot upward. thrive with more force than those which grow in an horizontal or bending position. The greater the bend the lesser therefore, become feeble.

Where branches, enfeebled as above, have offshoots in an ascending position, these acquire new vigor and strength. Branches which grow horizontally, on one side, thrive with greater vigor than me, and let me go out again "" those which grow in curves.

Other vegetating conditions being equal, we may assume that branches thrive in proportion to the leaves they bear. The more exposed to air and light are the branches, the greater the rapidity and vigor of their growth.

The vigor of the shoots on the branches indicates the degree of future growth and strength. The stronger, the healthier, and the riper is the bud above which the wood is cut in trimming, the more vigorous will be the shoot it will put forth. The removal of the end of a branch invigorates it, when untrimmed and left to their natural growth, the branches dry

The annual trimming, if too great, injures the wood, producing knots and puffs on the branches, and diminishing the flow of the sap. Trimming strengthens the branches, which become weak if allowed to grow The more fruit a branch bears, the less it will thrive.

Pinching off the young shoots and trimming, while the tree is in foliage, the branches. Trimming the outer branches too little, entirely prevents or at least greatly retards the development of new branches. On the ascending and on the little inclined branches only the buds at the upper end develop themselves well; those further back mostly languish. On branches with offshoots, those nearest the stem are favored in their growth, while the more distant ones remain feeble and weak. Upon branches not subjected to trimming, and which are trained alternately in ascending and curving direction. so that they form a waving line, all buds thrive with nearly equal ease and

In kernel fruit trees, breaking out and trimming encourages the setting of fruit. In stone fruit trees, the little branches produce fruit as indefinitely as with ker-

In these rules lies the whole art of trees divides itself into two definate periods. First into the period of fruit, barrenness and growth; next into that of fruit productions and dying off. Between growth and productions is a third mo-The business of the trimmer is to step in with a view to secure, in the future life of the tree, not only a favorable equilibrium between these two forces, but also to prevent their waste. Much sap makes wood, little sap produces fruit;

this is the completing idea of this task. The younger and stronger a tree is the more the sap tends to the surface of the stems. The sap flows most strongly toward the ascending branches, and this, flow is retarded by bending them. The ascending shoots or branches promote their vegetating powers. Sap circulates freer in perpendicular than in curving branches. Other things being equal, branches have the more vigor the more foliage there is upon them. Sap flows especially into those branches which are most exposed to light and air. The quantity of sap in a branch corresponds with the gumminess and stickiness of the sap. The annual growth of a shoot depends upon the bud above which the wood is cut. Annual shortening of the branches strengthens them, as it restores the equilibrium between its diameter and length. San circulates freer in a branch when the cuts are made at regular intervals, and not close to each other. These principles indicate the process to be pursued, viz:

First—Feeble branches are to be strengthened by producing growth without fruit formation, by bending the branch perpendicularly, putting the outer branches into this position by trellis trimming; conservation of foliage by not removing young shoots; by air and light; by continued cuts lengthwise into the rind on each side, and at the places where offshoots take effect; by cutting above a healthy bud; by the suppression of fruit; by long, but moderate trimming.

Second-Branches which are too vigorous must be weakened by bending; by the wavy curve; by the removal of the branch buds; by the temporary withdrawal of air and light; by cutting above a poorly developed bud; by the short cut; by removal of the young shoots; by trimming while the foliage

Third-The treatment of the small branches or shoots. The annual trimming of the branches gives equal life to all the buds thereon; the alternate, perpendicular and varying direction of branches suffices to afford equal life to all buds, and to prevent the necessity of trimming it off entirely in time. The sap, which circulates in the outer, hanging down branches of a tree, will favor the buds upon the extremities, and neglect those nearer the stem.

The general deduction from the above being that we should try to secure fruit branches each year; while not overlooking the life of the numernual shortening of the wood branches and sprouts to one half or two thirds; the removal of the buds upon the outer extremes: trimming above feeble buds and above the crown of the tree; breaking off the described as, and assessed to parties as felpoints of sprouts and the removal of lows, to-wit: more than six leaves above buds that NAMES. A POWERFUL FERTILIZER.—Every farmer has soot at command, whose presence in stovepipes or chimneys is not unfrequently the cause of fires, occasioning the loss sometimes of both property and life. This agent for evil is one of the most valuable manures, and nothing but the most culpable carelessness and indifference will suffer it to remain a standing menace to life and property when it can be easily removed and turned to good account in the field or garden. Twelve quarts of soot in a hogshead of water will make a powerful liquid manure, which will improve the growth of flowers, garden vegetables, or root crops. In either a liquid or solid state, it makes an excellent top dressing for grass or cereal

Potatoes poured into his cellar from all the country round, and when the avalanche had subsided, the man handed over his three dollars for the best peck, and the next spring sold potatoes enough wood at the expense of the fruit; per to more than cover the original outlay, besides having had a first quality article for home use all the winter.

"ONE OF THE BOYS." - A youngster came home after having a glorious time in the puddles, his face all aglow, and his rubber boots full of water. The punishment of staying in the house for the remainder of the day did not seem very hard at first: the annual growth of the branches, which, but as his little heart warmed up with the recollection of the triumphs of the morning, when he had waded deeper than any of his playmates dared to, he could bear the restraint no longer, and went to his mother, saying: "Please, mother, whip 40400

A SOUTHERN VIEW OF BILK POMERY .-The Mobile correspondent of the Montgomery Advertiser says, with excellent good sense: "I had a glimpse of the farfamed Brick Pomeroy, but did not have the pleasure of hearing him 'lecture.' I do not much regret it, however, for I look upon Brick' as something of a humbug, and believe his lectures and letters are injurious to the South: besides, he makes Pinkley, Joseph our 'oppressed people' pay to bear him tell how badly he was treated."

HARD ON THE MONKEY .- Prof. Agassiz, in a recent lecture, remarked: "The monkeys of South America were far inferior to those of the east. Eastern monkeys were found so nearly approaching the human species, that some naturalists had discovered an advantage on the part of the monkey."

Keno.-The following is a Dutchman's definition of the game of "Keno," now so fashionable: "Dat ish a leedle games ven all der fellers sets round mit der dables, greatly retards the vigorous growth of and put puttons on pasteboard cards mit figgers on 'em, and don't say some dings already, and den by-and-by one feller he says, 'Genoo,' and den all dem udder fellers say, 'Oh hell!'".
