OREGON

Mount Hood's Crest.—At a meeting of the California Academy of Natural Sciences, held on the 16th, Col. Williamson submitted the following as the final results of his computations on the late ascent of Mount Hood.

Stations. Inter. alt. All above Sea level at mean low tide.

He says: "It may be asked, why is it that the results here given differ so widely from some previous estimates? Mt. Hood is said to be, by Mitchell's school atlas, 12,391 feet, and the Rev. Geo. H. Adams, with a party, ascended to the summit in August of last year, boiled water with a spirit lamp, found that the thermometer read 180° and therefore concludes the mountain is 17,600 feet, and Government Camp 4,400 above the sea.

Weather at Dalles.—The Mountaineer says: Last Friday and Saturday we were favored with a "right smart sprinkle" of rain, just sufficient to lay the dust nicely.

The Cascade Range.—The Ensign persists in the belief that there are quartz lodes in the mountains of Douglas county that will pay, and in substantiation of this belief it mentions a long list of lodges that assay well, and give fair promise of yielding an handsome return when properly worked.

The Murderer of Keeler.—A private named McIntyre, of Company F, 23d Infantry, has been arrested and examined on a charge of killing Marshal Keeler at the Dalles. Two men, Kennedy and Sheppard, testified that they were within a few feet of McIntyre at the time he fired the fatal shot.
