The train of emigrant wagons passed over the spot. which a few years before had been covered by a magnificent sheet of water, and followed through the valley left by the same, sixty miles, to what had been the end of the lake. In 1867 Mr. Meek again returned to the same spot, and imagine his amazement to find the lake as he first witnessed it in 1833-there before him lay the apparently same magnificent sheet of water, looking as beautiful as it did before its entire disappear. ance. Now, that there may be no bers of very young children. Books doubt of this singular fact, we can of a most immoral character are produce the evidence of Mr. Meek's own observation. Doubting his own senses, he searched the country over until he found the wagon trail made in 1845, and traced the same to the end of the lake, where it entered the same (the old track, of course, being covered with the water of the lake mentioned.) He then followed the rim or beach of the lake around to the opposite end. (sixty miles.) and there found the wagon trail making its appearance from under the water. and where, so many years before, the emigrant train had passed over the self-same spot covered now with water. This, to us, and perhaps to the reader, may seem a strange story ruin. The majority outlive the effects to relate--but our old citizens know Mr. Meek, and know that they can rely upon his statements. Although now fifty-eight years of age, Mr. M. looks hale and hearty, and much younger than his brother, "Joe' Meek, who is his junior.

A very undesirable character is the proud and "stylish" school-girl who criticises and ridicules everybody. Cruel children, such as one finds in abundance in the South, and malignantly mischievous ones, also exert a vast amount of evil. From many sources we learn that, within a very few years, and especially in New England and New York State, deeply corrupting influences have been introduced into many schools. Those who have detected them have been amazed to find how well the secrets have been kept, and for what a length of time, by nummanufactured by the scores of thousands weekly in New York and Bos ton, and circulated among schools. Some time since we read of a dealer of such wares, who contrived to get the addresses of seventeen hundred young girls, mostly at school, and sent to each a catalogue of books of the most forbidden and unmentionable kind. To this we may add that, in America, children share with their parents those luxuries of life which always stimulate precocious develop-
