The Carrain's Story.—Some twenty years ago, I was coming from Calcutta in a good ship I then commanded; I had been away from home eleven months, during which time I heard no news thence, either private or public. Off Barnegat we fell in with a fishing smack, having on board a, man and boy, father and son. We wanted some fresh fish, and the father coming on board, we soon made a bargain with him, receiving in exchange for a real Inhim, receiving in exchange for a real in-dian bandana handkerchief, a plentiful supply. "Well, skipper," said I, after the bar-

"Well, skipper," said I, after the barter was over, "what's the news !"

"May mind the

"Never mind the potatoes," I replied,
"tell us the news—what's going on in the political world?"
"Politikil!" said the fisherman, standing silently for a few moments. "Politi-kil!" d'ye see that follow in my boat yonder ?" pointing to his son, a map headed-fellow of righteen, "wal captain, that are ohap made two bundred dollars last win-

There was no use in trying to get anything out of him, so we parted. Three or four years after, on my return from another voyage, coming on the same coast, I again met this fisherman. He remem-bered me, took the identical bandana I had given him, waved it with a cheer above his head, and awore I should have the best his head, and swore I should have the best and the biggest of all the fish he had. I made another purchase of him, and was anxious for the news. "What's the news!" I inquired, "who's president?"—it was after a general elec-

Said the fisherman "D'ye recollect my boy, that I had in the smack with me—the one who made two hundred dollars?"

"Yes," said I.

"And that," said the captain in conclusion, is all I ever got out of the fisher man of Barnegar.—Spir. of the Times.

HORRID TRAGEDY .- In Fleming county, on Wednesday last, William Ringo had an altereation with Mr. —, who had married his sister, whom he killed on the spot by a single shot from a revolver.— Ringo's mother ran up to expostulate, when the inhuman monster fired two shots into her hody, from which she died the next day. His sister, wife of the murder. next day. His sister, wife of the murder, ad man, then ran up, when the fiend shot her through the thigh. She is likely to recover. He then made off; but the next day was pursued by the neighbors, who found him at the house of another neighbors. On seeing the company advancing, course the house. He was mentioned to the country of the house. He was mentioned to through the abdences by one of the party. Hather she at another of the party, wounding him slightly in the shoulder, who thereupon fired back, killing the monster instantly. The parties surrendered themselves to the law authorities, were examselves to the law authorities, were examined and acquitted.

So horrid a tragedy it does not often fall to the lot of the chronicler to record.

His son, the Prince de Joinville, is spo-ken of as a probable candidate for the Presidency of France in 1852. The Prince is, and always has been, exceedingly pop-ular in Prance; the republican party have already begun to think seriously of him as a rival candidate to Louis Napoleon, and serve themselves with his popularity to gain their own end. They hope the castet branch of the house of Orleans will be thus ruined by a castet of its own fam-ily, as they ruined the house of Bourbon in 1859. The name of de Joinville will unite all the moderate men in France; the unite all the moderate men in France; the powerful journal La Presse and Emile de Girardia will support him with all their strength, and they think to find the Prince a good republican. It is well known that were so liberal that he was suspected of republican tendencies.

OCTA GRAMATICAL PUTIL.—A country schoolmaster in the neighborhood of Cunk-ney, giving one of his pupils a severe drub-bing for speaking bad grammar, sent him to the other end of the room to inform another bey that he wished to speak to him, and at the same time promising to repeat the dose, if he spoke to him ungramatically. The youngster, being quite satisfied with what he had got, determined to be exact and thus addressed his pupil. "There is a common substantive of the masculine gender, singular number, nominative case, and in an angry mood that sits perched upon the eminence in the other end of the room who wishes to articulate a few sen-tences to you in the present tense."

Ross, the "Xpress" man, who paid $650 for the first ticket to Jenny Lind's concert in Providence, is a very excentric personage, and his oddities are well known to every body within fifty miles of Providence. Any thing he does will be sure to be done in a different way from what any other person would do it. Per instance, in his household matters, he carpets the celling and whitewashes the floors. The doors of his shouse, instead of swinging upon hinges, open by dropping into the cellar. The roof of his dwelling is also inverted, the gutter being in the centre, and the water carried off at the end. In his dress he has is equally bixarre. His boots are several inches longes than his feet, running to a point, and curling up like a pig's tail; his coat is buttoned behind, and, although we are not positive on this point, we believe that, in dressing, he puts his pantallous on over his head. He drives a smart little poney attached to a low-wheeled hunger, of which the larger wheels are in intle poney attached to a low, wheeled buggy, of which the larger wheels are in front. He is excentric is every thing he does, and has got the rooks.

Mr. McDonough, the millionaire, in his will, says:

"Let the poorer disses of the world be consoled, assured that the labor-loving, frugal, industrious and virtuous among them possess joys and happiness in this life which the rich know not and cannot appreciate. So well convinced am I, after a long life and intercourse with my fellowmen of all classes, of the truth "that the happiness of this life is altogether on the side of the virtuous poor," that, had I children, (which I have not) and a fortune to leave behind me at death, I would bequeath, after a virtuous education, to effect which nothing should be spared, a very small amount to each, merely sufficient to excite them to liabits of industry and frugality, and no more." and frugality, and no more.

On the day of the great meeting of the socessionists at Kingston, a revolutionary soldier, returning to his residence in Cobb county, on the railroad, noticed a crowd gathering, though his eyes were so dim that he could not very well ease them. He asked what all that meant. He was told they were trying to get the people to dissolve or secede from the Union. Whereupon he dropped his withered face, and seemed to be in deep distress for one or two minutes; after which he raised up his head, and with a faltering voice said, "Oh, don't do that till I am dead!" While he uttered these words, the large tears chased each other down his way, worn checks.—
He was told that a great number of men would try to prevent them, to which he replied, "Don't let them do it till I am dead!"
