For the Spectator.

CASCADES, June 15, 1851

DEAR SCHNEELY:

I deem it not amiss to give you a short account of an adventure which befell a party of us here yesterday. After the narration, those who have seen the Cascades of the Columbia, will readily comprehend the extent of our peril.

In the forenoon, myself, Mr. P. A. Chenoweth, Mr. Watkins, Mr. Reynolds, and an Indian, attempted to float a clumsily built flat-bottomed boat, heavily freighted with sawed lumber, from the sawmill to the upper end of the railroad, but instead were drifted into the Cascades. While near, Mr. Reynolds jumped overboard, and swam ashore. The others of us remained. Very soon the boat became filled with water, and the greater portion of the lumber discharged; and it required much effort to keep ourselves with the boat, during its passage through the river Cascades. But in the present high stage of the river, greater danger awaited us in the Rapids a mile below.—Here the remainder of the lumber was with it. [illegible] Chenoweth and the Indian were each cast away from the boat;—the Indian recovered it —Mr. Watkins swam to a piece of scantling. Ere long, the boat was caught in a whirlpool, when both it and the Indian disappeared entirely for several seconds. Presently the boat, bottom upwards, was floating quietly in an eddy, hard by. I thought the Indian was drowned. I looked again: He was sedately seated on the boat, deliberately divesting himself of his clothing. Soon afterwards the boat lodged on the head of the first island below the Cascades, from which the Indian was safely carried to the main land.

Three of us still drifted down, clinging to portions of the lumber. By the use of an oar, (which had accidently remained with our raft) Mr. Chenoweth and I succeeded in landing on an island about four miles below the Cascades. The water of the Columbia is comparatively very cold; and by this time had greatly chilled us. Neither did a cool brisk breeze, which was blowing up the river, add anything to our comfort. Mr. Chenoweth, who had been unwell for a few days previous, was nearly exhausted. But we were soon relieved by Mr. Wells, Mr. Hamilton, and Mr. McNott, who promptly came searching for us, with a boat. With their ready assistance, we doffed our water-soaked garments, and donned dry ones instead. We were soon landed at Mr. McNott's, where his lady quickly prepared coffee, and other "substantials," by which, with the aid of a cheerful blaze, we were soon resuscitated.

Mr. Watkins was less fortunate. He drifted two or three miles farther down; and when picked up, but for the absence of the peculiar appendages to his heels, he would have exhibited a striking [illegible] (viz: a shirt-collar, and a pair of spurs.)

Father Dubois passed here yesterday, journeying from Fort Colville to the valley. He says the past winter has been unusually mild, at the Fort. A portion of the emigrants who came in from Fort Hall this spring, are yet at the Dalles; and I understand that they contemplate crossing the Cascade Mountains soon. The proprietors here, are making good progress with their railroad.

Yours, &c.,
JUSTIN CHENOWETH.

FIRST ARRIVAL AT OREGON FROM THE CELESTIAL EMPIRE.—The brig Amazon, arrived at this place on Monday last, direct from Whampoa, China. She made the entire passage between the two ports in seventy five days, although contrary winds prevailed, till within three hundred miles of her destination. She reports the Emma Preston hence as having arrived at Hong Kong 1st of April.

The Amazon brings a general assortment of tea, sugar, coffee, syrup, &c., to Norris & Co., for this market.—Oregonian.

The Emma Preston, says the Times, sailed from this port on the first of February last, and was the first vessel that was ever sent from Oregon to China.

Song for the Fourth of July.

When Freedom, from her classy home
Looked down upon the drooping world,
She saw a band of lofty bloom,
Where Ocean's sparkling billows curl'd;
The embodied band in mighty bands,
And venture sled its banner plains—
But floods and fields and lonly woods,
All were alike a despot's chains!
"Be free!" she cried, "band of my choice;
Arise! and put thy burdens on!
Let every patriot raise his voice
For LIBERTY and WASHINGTON!

The word went forth from hill to vale,
Each patriot's heart leapt at the sound;
Proud Freedom's banner flung'd the gale,
And Britain's chains fell to the ground.
Man stood erect in majesty,
The proud defender of his rights;
For where is he would not be free
From stern oppression's dead'ning blights?
Be free,—be free, this happy land!
Forever beam the happy light that shone
Upon that firm and dauntless band,
Who fought beside our WASHINGTON!

Lo! where the forest's children roved
Midst woody hill and rocky glen,
Wild as the dark retreats they loved—
What now are towns were deserts then.
The untold hum mark'd my onward way,
And Peace rounds the glorious day
Which made the Western Empire free.
Be free—be free then, glorious Land!
In UNION, in thy millions ONE!
Be strong in friendship's hety hand,
Thy brightest star—our WASHINGTON!

To Andrew Jackson McKay.

NORTH FORK AMERICAN RIVER, CALIFORNIA, June 11, 1851.

HAVING recently learned of his departure from Springfield Illinois, and soon expected in Oregon on the hunt of me, his father, I would give notice through your paper that I can be found at Barnes' Bar, North Fork of American River, California. Any information given of his situation or whereabouts will be gratefully remembered by an anxious father, who is desirous to have him restored to his family. Should this notice meet his eye, he will relieve me very much by communicating the facts relative to his situation. If he has not the means to bring him by water to San Francisco, I wish him to write me immediately and I will send the necessary amount as soon I receive such information and the place to which it may be sent.

Persons living in the settlements where the immigrants come into the Territory, would do me a special favor by making inquiry concerning him.

If Mr. Foster, at the foot of the mountains, and Mr. Olney, at the Dalles, will exert themselves a little to get this notice before him, they will confer a lasting favor upon me and an unfortunate son.
