Correspondence.

For the Spectator.

Oct. 18th, 1851.

Dear Spec.:—I was very much pleased upon taking up your paper of Oct. 14th, to see the poetry signed "Z," entitled, "Lines to Miss M. A. F." I have been a reader of your paper for some time, and expect to continue one; and therefore excuse me for this exhibition of interest in the poetry found in your paper. The style of this piece I recognize as the same that distinguished the production signed "Lilliput," that appeared in your paper some time since upon which you remember, some envious, evil disposed person attempted some criticisms. The course you have pursued however, of encouraging contributions, has at last, I see, had the much desired effect, and has brought forth from their retreat the long hidden poetic talents of "Z," who as aforesaid, I can readily see is none other than our long silent and quondam poet, "Lilliput." I was struck at the time, with the emanations of "Lilliput," and was confident that at no distant day, Oregon would have reason to be proud of its illustrious bard! but upon the publication of the criticism alluded to, I was fearful that it might have the effect to stop further productions from that source; for we all know that the possessor of brilliant talents is always timid and little inclined to forwardness, therefore every obstacle in the way of ungenerous criticisms &c., has a tendency to alarm the shrinking poet, and deprive the world of some of the most precious poetic contributions of its precocious youths.—Some might be ungenerous enough to think that the rehearsel of the poets feelings when thinking of his idolized, was not interesting to those unaffected in the same way; but you Mr. Editor, are aware that love is one of the most holy passions frail humanity are capable of entertaining: and if you have no experience yourself, that of all who have had, would but confirm the above, and so far as my experience goes it confirms it in every particular. The first two lines of this piece are descriptive of my feelings in such cases exactly. Allow me to repeat them:

"I think either at morn when all is calm and still,
I think either when naught is heard but the murmuring rill."

The following lines are very touching:

"I think of thee and thee alone, and feel that I am blest."

The only difference between "Z's" feelings and mine in such cases seems to be, that at intervals his feelings become quite tranquil; but with me my passions refuse to be hushed, and like an obstinate squalling baby, I have cried to them O, hush! O, hush! and d—n me if they would hush at all. But dear Spec. I entreat you to continue to pursue the same course of encouragement towards the contributers of poetry as heretofore, and when the name of "Z" shall have become famous throughout the world, the young of the then rising generation; will be taught when you pass to lift their hats and bow their heads as they say, "there goes the Editor who took "Z" by the hand and encouraged him to give to the world those sublime productions which are the wonder of mankind!!

Yours, P. C.

Editor Spectator—Sir:—I have taken my pen, and at the same time the liberty, to address you for the purpose of rendering a willing tribute of thanks and commendation to the enterprising and gentlemanly proprietor of the Hotel in Linn City, Mr.—Price. Having arrived at that place, after a tedious day's ride, hungry and tired, I did emphatically find a place of comfort, refreshment and repose. I have travelled this wide world (nearly) all over" and at no place in O. T. have I found a public house kept with so much neatness, order and decorum, with such comfortable and cleanly sleeping apartments, or with a table so well supplied, as at his house. Every attention a traveller can desire, he receives, and that too in a way characteristic of a true gentleman. I was so gratified and pleased with the appearance of everything about the house, that I at once determined to let the travelling public know where comfort and rest are to be found. By giving the above publicity, you will oblige a wanderer and I doubt not the public generally.

Yours,
A Traveller.

☞ The river has fallen very much, and navigation above as far as Salem, is one of the impossibilities of the times. The Canemah went last week within six miles of Salem, but was obliged to give up the project of going further, the water being too low.

For the Spectator.

Ma. Editor:

Sir:—I have witnessed the practice, a few days since, in Portland among the property holders, of a systematized imposition on the immigrants upon their arrival in the territory. I have noticed, in order to fill up their empty houses, and enrich their own pockets, that persons are persuaded that they cannot possibly do better than to locate at that point or in the timber adjacent to fight the fern, which, by the way, is a never-ending task. This, in my opinion, is a very destructive policy and must eventually end in defeat and disappointment.

In a conversation with some newly arrived immigrants, whilst on a visit there last week, I pointed out the way for those who wish to settle down in a good country to pursue. Instead of contending with the heavy timber found there, and the never-dying fern, I prevailed on them to come into the country above, with the injunction not to stop in my neighborhood but to go still higher up, the further the better. The result was, that some 30 or 40 persons immediately took up their line of march for the upper Willamette valley. And ere another month elapses I expect to hear of their being pleasantly located on good claims and highly delighted with the change they have made in coming to Oregon. It is certainly very selfish, to say nothing of the injustice of the thing, to thus attempt to hoodwink the poor immigrants and take advantage of their already greatly accumulated necessities by holding out the most flattering inducements to them to remain at any of the points on the lower Willamette, the best of which has been taken up years ago.—How many, I would ask, have been thus fooled and are now cursing their fate and those who have made dupes of them? I would further ask where are the stores in Washington county, out of Portland and what are they? Where is the country to support the great number there now engaged in the mercantile business? Do they depend upon the little nucleus immediately around them? No. Ask them where their goods go to, and they will tell you they go to the upper country. And yet these very men, although dependent on the country above for support, are using their utmost endeavors to "retard its settlement and stifle its growth."

I have extended this article farther than I at first intended, but I am desirous that the matter should be so placed before them that they can readily perceive the suicidal policy of keeping back information from those who it is their duty to protect rather than skin.

St. Helens, Oct. 14, 1851.

Ma. Editor:

It may be possible that all your readers and particularly the late emigrants, do not know there is such a place as St. Helens, or if so, they may not know that they have a regularly organized city, marshall, city Fathers and all; and one boast of having more good substantial buildings in proportion to the number than any town in Oregon. I have no doubt there, I wish I had; I don't live there, I wish I did, but on my visit to the place after an absence of twelve months the place was so much altered that it was with difficulty I found the residence of my old friend the Capt., who introduced me to many distinguished citizens of the place, and among the numbers a merchant, Mr. B. of New York, who invited me to partake of some three baskets of Champaigne, besides a few loaves and sardine fishes, where we passed the evening most agreeably, and by one simultaneous resolve, which is the last of the proceedings I can remember definitely enough to pen with precision, they struck up that good old tune, "we won't go home till morning."
