LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Edited by Mrs. M. J. Bailey.

Friday Evening, May 19, 1854.

Horsemanship.

The season has again returned which is favorable for the enjoyment of this delightful exercise. Nature has put on her "Sunday dress," and seems to be saying to us on every hand, "come and see me." Let's away to the country! Farms are "fixed up," and your vegetation is looking about for approving eyes. Colts, calves and lambs —young pigs and poultry are there gamboling in all the fullness of new life and happiness. Let us go and see them! The birds will sing their sweetest songs, and flowers will yield their richest fragrance.—Our graceful palfreys will be as happy as we, and if used with care will serve us with delight. And when we return, how much invigorated our spirits! when we retire to rest, how happy with the overwhelming impression upon our minds, that God is perfect in all his works.

From Graham's Magazine for April we copy the following fashions for a lady's riding dress:—

"In the Lady's figure, the hat is looped up by cords, not seen in the plate, very tastefully, and ornamented with a flowing plume. It is confined under the chin by a band.

"The riding habit is of Polish green cloth. The basque gracefully rounded away toward the back, after flowing nearly even to open the vest. The front is confined at the throat by cords looped over military buttons. The vest also is similarly fastened. The sleeves are very easy, and turned up at the militaire, and slashed upon the cuffs. They are cross-laced by a cord. The embroidery upon them is en suite with that wrought upon the body, and a similar band round the basque. Braid may be employed for this purpose.

"We have to thank Madame Demorest for this style of riding habit. The quantity of slight weights of lead are also worthy of being employed in the bottom of the skirt, to prevent the too great action of the wind when mounted, disturbing it in any degree."

We add a few items of our own, which we think are in keeping with fashion, and the rules of horsemanship on the points only, however, about which ladies are most apt to err:

The reins should be held in the forehand, and the hand should not be depressed below the line of the waist. The whip should be carried in the right hand, and when not required, thrown gracefully upon the shoulder. The body should not be thrown forward in the manner of leaning over the pommel of a stooping horse.

Dark colors, as riding habits, look much more befitting than light, and straw hats better in summer than velvet or beaver, as they do not fatigue the head.

Stanzas

The heart can find no place
Such cruelties to trace,
The tender thoughts to see
All blighted, withered, dead,
But still the Cord of Love
Unbroken with the bosom
Its fondness and its feeling
Proves

Of changes and ruin
Of changes and ruin
If we no hope could borrow
No gleam of promise
From what we feel within us
Of Love's eternal dawn
And friendships love

The glorious earth is shaded
With darkness as the tomb
Its rainbow hues all faded,
And life a mirror with gloom
Existence robbed of promise
And all its treasure
Where could we look for treasure,
If cold the heart and worn

Going to Church.

Who does not find it pleasurable and profitable to spend the Sabbath, or a part of it, in listening to an eloquent sermon!

We shall not soon forget the effect produced on our mind from hearing an interesting discourse, on the 24th ult., delivered by Rev. Mr. Dickinson of Salem. The subject was God's over ruling Providence. In a most clear, quiet and emphatic manner, he demonstrated that God's watchful care is ever over his people—that, although he may suffer wrong to triumph for a season, and will over-rule all events to the accomplishment of good; making even the "wrath of man to praise him," and exercising circumstances, which in the eyes of man are of the most trivial importance, to be instrumental of the greatest good. In the speaker's manner there were no forced or unnatural gestures, no screaming, making weak nerves to vibrate; and what was best, no dreamy dullness to show that his observations were pedantic, unmeaning, or inapplicable. But the truths proclaimed were most impressively enforced by the speaking eye, the tremulous hand, and the eager manner of the speaker, which showed that his whole mind was absorbed in the subject, and that he was convinced of the truth and importance of his theory. The assembly appeared inspired with unearthly sensations, and probably could have sat most patiently and delighted [illegible]

Wife Wanted.

THE advertiser, desirous of obtaining a partner to share with him life's joys and sorrows, takes this method of making known his own qualifications, as well as those he would wish her to possess. To please, she must not be more than over 21 years of age, of medium size, [illegible] ing eyes and dark brown hair, must be a stranger to bad habits, and in the enjoyment of good health; must understand washing, ironing, cooking and sewing, and the general routine of household duties. A knowledge of music would be desirable, but —if possessing the other qualities—the taste for, and ability to acquire that, would be sufficient. She must be intelligent, prudent, amiable and kind, and have a mind to appreciate and a heart to love one who can truly love her in return; must be at home, as well in the parlor as in the kitchen, and in every way qualified for the duties and responsibilities of a wife.

Such an one will find in the advertiser one who has a heart to love, and a disposition to please; one who is temperate, industrious and economical; one who despises the hypocrite, and respects and loves the moral and the good—whether rich or poor—wherever they may be found; one who is cheerful, contented and happy, and possessed of good health, good sense, and a fair share of the worlds goods, and though not handsome, would not object to a young lady on that account; one who respects the rights of woman, but will on all occasions look to her on his; one who has the disposition and independence to do what is right, as well as the firmness to shun what is wrong, and one who believes in the existence of a God, and in the truth of the Bible.

Any lady, possessing the requisite qualifications, desirous of forming an acquaintance with the advertiser, will please address [illegible]
