The Spectator.

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 14, 1860.

CORRESPONDENTs are sending letters from the different points of the State. The arrival of the mail at this place, the new building of the Post Office, and the opening of the new railroad, are subjects of interest to the people of the State. The new building of the Post Office is a model of its kind, and is one of the most imposing structures in the State. The new railroad is a great improvement, and will greatly facilitate communication between the different parts of the State.

We have received a letter from a correspondent in the north, who says that the people there are much interested in the new railroad. They say that it will greatly facilitate communication between the different parts of the State, and will be of great benefit to the people. They say that the people are much pleased with the new railroad, and that it will be of great benefit to the State.

We understand that the new railroad is a great improvement, and will greatly facilitate communication between the different parts of the State. It is said that the people are much pleased with the new railroad, and that it will be of great benefit to the State.
