Marguerite.

She is so sweet, so sweet, My dainty Marguerite. She is so fair, so fair, From clustering golden hair To little restless feet.

But can I tell her this, And can I beg a kiss? I fear she would say "Nay"-A! but a blushing "Yea" Would be such bliss!

Yet she is cold, so cold; I dare not be so bold. If she my love would bless And give me but a tress Of her dear hair of gold!

But she's no heart, no heart; Her sweetness is an art. Her hair's a glittering net, So she's not stung me yet With Love's keen dart.

Farewell, then, Marguerite! Though flowers spring at your feet, I will not be your slave. Your love I do not crave, Nor will I call you sweet.
