It is reported among the Indians on the reservation that one of their number joined the hostiles and was killed.

W. A. Luelling will deliver the opening address at the coming State Fair. A. J. Dufur will deliver the annual address.

The price at Salem is $10 per ton for wheat and oat hay; $11 per ton for good timothy, with an active demand at those prices. Oats are bringing 50 cents per bushel, with none of the new crop yet in the market.

All are aware of the fact that ladies have a pocket low down on the dress skirt—well, when we see them reaching down in that locality after a handkerchief or something, it looks as if they were scratching their l—ower extremity.

If J. W. Redington, formerly of Salem, who was last heard of in Eastern Oregon and Idaho, will communicate with the Salem Daily Record office, giving his present postoffice address, he will confer a great favor upon his many friends in that vicinity both male and female.

In Wisconsin they have some big saw-mills. At Eau Claire a mill cut 183,000 feet in eleven hours. One-half the amount was one-inch lumber, and the balance two-inch. A mill at Peshtigo cut 1,000,659 feet in six days. Even better work than this has been done at some of the Michigan mills. We believe no saw-mill on Puget Sound has ever equalled the product of the larger mills of Michigan, although possessing an advantane in logs.

We have waited patiently for authentic information in regard to the alleged defalcation of James Hendershott, Esq., while register of the State lands for the LaGrande district; but nothing reliable coming to hand we publish what we can learn. Rumor has it that the defalcation amounts to $9,000 (we have our doubts as to the magnitude of the sum). Further that all property is in the name of his wife. There are two rumors afloat; one is that she will give up every dollar to clear her husband's liability, the other is that she will not give up a dollar. If the defalcation is not made good the securities on Mr. Hendershott's official bond will be financially ruined, they being Arthur Warnick, M. Baker and John A. Childers. It is hoped by friends of all the parties in interest that all discrepancies may be quickly and easily adjusted.

THE LOCAL NEWSPAPER.

The liberal sustaining of a newspaper, by the people in whose locality it is published and in whose interests it must necessarily operate, is a much greater source of wealth, not only to patrons but to the community in general, than is ordinarily supposed. There is nothing which more correctly tells the character and grade of a community, village or town than the local paper. Persons desiring information concerning sections of country, with which they are unacquainted, call for the local newspaper in preference to any other plan for procuring the history of the place. The enterprise, liberality, wealth, etc., of a place is portrayed in the advertisements and general condition of their local newspaper. Some papers seem to say by their appearance, that their locality is healthy, and rich in all the most important resources; the purses of the people plentiously filled, enterprise running high and all things tending to draw capital as a magnet attracts the needle; thus continually adding supports to make the foundation of their town endurably solid. This the local paper tells in the number and character of patrons, contributors, advertisers, etc., etc. Other papers in turn seem by the same means to say that they are trying hard to pull their very existence from the tight purse strings of their more illiberal communities. The little one square advertisement says by its appearance that the undersigned is stingy, close fisted and takes no further interest in the enterprise of the place than to get all he can for as little as possible, and thus an impediment is placed in the way of progress, causing the place to wither like a plant shut out from the sunlight. An occasional baptismal shower of telegraphic news, editorial notes and locals exemplifies what might be done with sufficient means, but this expensive work cannot be kept up without prompt support, and so the paper is forced into correspondence with the enterprise of the place.

A newspaper, like a child, wants support and fostering care in the beginning of its existence, so that when it can stand alone it may be able to bring credit upon the community in which it is located. Everyone should take the local, home newspaper; it gives more real information than can possibly be given by any other paper; when other papers misrepresent you, in any way, your home paper speaks in your defense. Your home paper tells you what is the most successful department of industry in its table of prices at home and foreign markets, and in its editorials on local resources; your home paper tells other persons what you have to sell and what you wish to buy; your home paper in addition to its pleasant stories, household articles, etc., teaches your children the history of your county and State; your home paper teaches your children what is vice and what is virtue, giving the laws punishing one and rewarding the other; in fact your interests are so nearly allied that you rise or fall together. Hence you should support your home paper, not grudgingly as a disagreeable duty, but willingly, in such a spirit as will satisfy the editor that you consider the investment will pay the expenditure and be a benefit to both you and him.

LETTER OF CONDOLENCE.

From Joseph Gale to the Relict of Thomas J. Hubbard, deceased.

The following letter, written under date of May 12, 1877, will be read with interest by new as well as old settlers in Oregon:

EAGLE VALLEY, May 12, 1877.

To MRS. MARY JANE HUBBARD:

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I have just received your kind letter, which brought me the sad tidings of the death of your beloved husband and my highly esteemed friend, and I can assure you it was with heart-felt sorrow I perused its contents. That he would have soon passed away, was nothing more than what might have been reasonably expected, since he had lived up to the age seldom passed by man. I had frequently heard of his declining health, therefore the news of his death did not surprise me much. But my sorrow was more increased by thinking on what you both must have suffered during those long months of his protracted illness, and knowing as I do that you had lived together as man and wife for nearly forty years, enables me to comprehend nearly what the state of your feelings must have been when the final hour arrived which was to separate you both forever. I say forever, I speak in regard to our mortal existence; but there is an affinity of spirits whose attractive power shall draw our spirits together in yon world of light, and we shall know each other there. Death is inevitable; we are all born but to die; and we, my honored friend, we too, you and my wife and I, are now in the last decade of our lives; we are standing, as it were, on the very verge of the grave, awaiting the summons which may arrive at any moment to call our spirits hence.

Here is one of those remarkable occurrences which now and then happen, a singular coincidence. I scarcely had finished reading your letter, when one of the children brought me a newspaper, in which I read the announcement of the death of ex-Governor Abernethy, who died on the same day your husband did. Does it not seem strange? He, too, was one of the early pioneers of Oregon. He came to the country as a missionary in 1840, or rather as one in charge of the store and mercantile affairs of the Methodist mission—a man better than whom Oregon never has had, nor never will have a better citizen.

Your deceased husband crossed the plains with and in the employ of Capt. Nathaniel I. Wyeth, in the year 1833; and on their way to Oregon they made a halt in the lower part of Shoshone valley, in order to replenish the wornout strength of their animals, and while this was being accomplished, built the trading post which from that date to the present has been known by the name of Fort Hall. It was named in honor of one of the gentlemen of the firm of Wyeth, Hall, Williams & Co., of Boston, Mass. The fort being completed and supplied with all necessary things, Capt. Joseph Thing was put in charge, with a sufficient number of men to garrison the post. Capt. Wyeth then resumed his march towards the mouth of the Columbia river, and after experiencing a great deal of hardship on his passage downward, ultimately arrived late in the Fall of the same year at Sauvie's Island, where he expected to have met his vessel, which was to have made the passage around Cape Horn and meet him there. And there, on the south bank of the island, a few miles below the mouth of the slough, he erected the first American establishment on the Pacific coast. Although Fort George was built by an American citizen, yet as it had since the war of 1812 been in the possession of England, it could not be called in the strict sense of the word an American establishment; hence you will see the propriety of calling Wyeth's the first permanent building upon the Pacific coast by a citizen of the United States. And there, at this establishment of Wyeth's, your deceased husband continued working at his trade, until the Company ceased operations, and finally left the country; and Thomas J. Hubbard, my deceased friend, John Tibbits, Solomon Smith and Henry St. Clair remained, and became the first permanent settlers in the Wallamet valley, all Americans. Now, in order to save myself from being accused of partiality and ignorance in regard to those who may have first reached these distant shores, I will state that at the same time and in the same company of Capt. Wyeth's, there was a company of missionaries, with the Rev. Jason Lee at their head; and it was to those missionaries the honor was due for having preached the first sermon of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the Rocky Mountains and Wallamet valley. In this same company were also two naturalists, the eminent John Nutate, and the other a young gentleman, a Mr. Townsend—I have forgotten his Christian name.

As it is my purpose to write a full history of matters and things concerning your deceased husband, and also concerning the early settlement of Oregon, to say more at present would be anticipating; and you, my friend, may think that these scraps of history are out of their place when incorporated into a letter which should be purely a letter of condolence. My reason for inserting them here, is because I was perfectly well acquainted with all the peculiarities of my deceased friend. I knew with what contempt and indifference he looked upon such things; and in this particular he may be classed with the renowned Daniel Boon, who left his fame to take care of itself. Does there not seem to be some fatality in all this? For behold, I the most unworthy of them all, am left almost alone. If Bridger still lives, then are we two, and if he too shall have passed away, then those beautiful lines of Moore, the poet, suit my case precisely; for

> "When I remember all the friends so linked together,
> I've seen around me fall like leaves in wintry weather,
> I feel like one
> Who treads alone
> Some banquet hall deserted;
> Whose lights are fled,
> Whose garlands dead,
> And all but he departed."

I will now conclude my letter, by assuring you that all of our hearts beat in sympathy for you in your great affliction and irreparable loss. Hoping that you may find comfort, is the sincere wish of us all; and believe me to be, as ever, your friend and humble servant, JOSEPH GALE.

Milton Items.

This is the best place in the country to live, as we have two Sundays; now if we can get a few more religious societies we would have Sunday all the time. Then we would not have to work.

Mr. N. Kilburg has rented Wormington hall and has put in a fine stock of groceries. He contemplates putting in a fine stock of dry goods and yankee notions soon.

We have just received 100 Spencer rifles and we are willing to use them if the Indians want lead.

I. Quinn has sold out one-half of his feed stable to Charles Ganno.

The farmers are very busy harvesting in this vicinity at present.

The meat market is closed on account of the hot weather.

Henry Frazier is putting up a fine dwelling house.

Blackberries are plenty in this vicinity. Peaches will soon be ripe.

THE INDIAN WAR.

The war news this week is really unimportant, except that Joseph, Whitebird and Lookingglass, with near 400 warriors, have left the recent scenes of war by the Lolo trail, passed into Bitter Root, Montana, and probably by this time are in British Columbia. Howard is now following the Indians with the expectation that they will be cut off by troops in Montana, and that then he will attack them in the rear. The Indians have two prisoners, an expressman and his companion.

LETTER FROM MAJOR CORNOYER.

UMATILLA INDIAN AGENCY, OREGON, August 1, 1877.—FRIEND BULL:—As I am leaving this evening on a visit to Grand Ronde valley, to counsel with the citizens of that valley on the propriety of allowing the Indians of this reservation to go to their usual place of fishing and drying roots, I have one request to make, if not imposing too much upon your kindness. I noticed some time ago an article in the Portland Oregonian, charging me with using threats to the Indians of the Columbia river, in order to induce them upon this reservation. These charges were made by Mr. Kunzie, of Umatilla Landing, and published in the Oregonian of the 17th of last July. Mr. Kunzie well knew that I denied these charges, and I think should have informed the Oregonian of the facts; but as he has not done it, duty to myself and to the citizens compels me to say that I never did use such language to induce them here; but I did inform all the Indians I could that they had better go upon some reservation, particularly during these exciting times, for their own protection. I received petitions nearly every day during the first two weeks of the present Indian difficulties in Idaho, to have all the Indians on the reservation. You and others well know what I have done to restrain the Indians. So far but few have gone away from the reservation, and those went with passes to fish, mostly on the Walla Walla river. Whilst I was complying with the orders of the Government, and also the wishes of the citizens of this county, what was my friend Mr. Kunzie doing? Why he was giving papers to the renegade Indians of the Columbia river, recommending them to the good citizens of Umatilla and Grant counties, using the name of John R. Foster & Co., one of the best firms in the country; and these Indians know that, and they firmly believe that papers from that firm give them the right to roam all over the country.

Now I believe if all citizens would let the Indians alone, that is, would not tamper with them, that but few of these renegade Indians would be at this time off their reservations; and instead of war and Butter creek stampedes, we would have peace between the Indians and citizens, notwithstanding the hatred these Columbia river Indians entertain against me.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, N. A. CORNOYER, U. S. Ind. Ag't.

CHURCH MATTERS.

PENDLETON, July 31, 1877.

EDITOR EAST OREGONIAN.—As you are perhaps aware, our otherwise quiet little village has been lately thrown into a seething caldron of excitement over the despicable and avaricious greed of the popular so-called christian (?) denomination usually known as the North Methodists. A few years ago a subscription was circulated in Pendleton and vicinity to obtain means to build a church or rather two churches; one for the Episcopal and the other to belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Episcopals were honest and told those who subscribed that the church could only be used by that denomination. But the Methodists used that as an argument against the Episcopals, and informed the people everywhere that their church would be free to all orthodox denominations, and if I am not mistaken, this was set forth in the article to which they were asked to subscribe. In proof of this I refer to the Reverends W. T. Koontz and Horner, both ministers of the Methodist Church.

The consequence was there was some $1,200 or $1,400 subscribed to aid in building the church. This, however, still left a debt hanging over it, and when the church was dedicated it was publicly announced (in order to raise money, I suppose) that the church was to be free to all orthodox denominations; to verify which, I refer to Reverends Shafer and Koontz. The debt was all paid except $200 to the Church extension, and $200 to Mr. Jacob Frazer, and for all of this I was security. We were also promised at the time that a minority of the Trustees should be selected for all time to come, from persons not members of the Methodist Church. The first meeting after this of the quarterly conference, the three Trustees were all selected from the pales of the church. Next came an order to me to deliver up the key that I had, to the Trustees; this I refused to do. At length there came into our midst two men; one claiming to be a minister of the gospel (Rev. Crowell), and the other, a Mr. Wells, a member of that church. Neither of these persons had a dollar in the church, but have taken control of it, and, as I am informed, by their influence all other denominations are turned out in the cold to preach, or else compelled to pay tribute to the M. E. Church. The—well, I came near saying the "mother of harlots", but I will not say that as I suppose the church is all right, but I must say it has fallen into very bad hands. All the other denominations, viz: Baptists, Southern Methodists and Campbellites are informed that they can continue to use the church by paying each $5 per month. Now, the Baptists have near $200 in the church, South Methodists and their immediate friends, about the same amount, the North Methodists, about $200, Deciples or Campbellites, considerable and outsiders the balance. The Episcopals, I believe, gave about as much as any other denomination. These denominations now all go to the court house or elsewhere to preach. A beautiful example to be set by a denomination of Christians. May the devil help them, for I am sure God never will.

Parties who subscribed to the church will commence suit for the recovery of the amount of their subscriptions soon. Then you may look for hot times.
