The Castle of Chillon.

Leaving Ouchy, the port of Lausanne, by one of the many steamers that ply over the beautiful lake of Geneva, a ride of half an hour brings us to the renowned Castle of Chillon. We have a full view of the castle before we reach it. The Alps, towering far into the clouds, form hitherto only little known. The following are the most important portions of his account:

Leading from this, the largest dungeon, are two others, one of which is the room where condemned prisoners must pass the last night of their lives. The solid rock was hewn out to form an inclined plane, which must serve as their bed if one they wished on that dreadful night. The other was the execution room. Here is a hoge beam, black with age, on which the condemned were suspended, or to which they were fastened to suffer other deaths. Many thousand Jews were here decapitated in the thirteenth century, charged with having poisoned all the public drinking fountains of Europe,
