Failure of Eye-sight.

(From our own correspondent.)

We propose to make a brief statement of some of the causes of failure of eye-sight. In order to do this intelligibly, it is necessary to begin with a description of eye itself. The eye is commonly spoken of as a ball, but in fact it is a large segment of one sphere baring a small segment of a lesser sphere fixed to it in front. If a small circular piece be cut from a ball and placed upon a large ball, a good figure of the true shape of the eye would be obtained. The small segment or circular piece would represent the cornea of the eye. The special duty of the cornea is to collect the rays of light coming to the eye and direct them to the pupil. It may be compared with the lens at the large end of a telescope. It is almost, but not quite, perfectly transparant. Next to the cornea and immediately behind it, comes the iris. This is a thin curtain stretched across the interior of the eye-ball. It is perforated nearly in the center by a circular opening called the pupil. This membrane is variously colored in different persons. By its contraction or expansion its aperture or the pupil is enlarged or diminished in in size. The duty of the iris is to regulate the quantity of light admitted to to the interior of the eye through the pupil. When the light is weak the opening is enlarged so that as many rays as possible may enter, and when the light is brilliant it is contracted so that no more than sufficient for sight may be admitted. The contraction or expansion of the iris is effected by the involuntary action of certain muscles. Next to the iris is the crystalline lens which receives the light coming through the pupil, and transmits it to the retina. The duty of the crystalline lens is similar to that of the cornea. When the rays of light come through the pupil they are by the retractive power of the cornea brought very near each other. The crystalline lens takes them up and so arranges them that they come to a point or focus exactly upon the retina. If the rays were to be brought to a focus either before or behind the retina they would produce a vague and uncertain sensation upon it, from which no idea could be obtained of the object from which they were reflected. In the case of near-sighted people, the focus is a little in front of the retina, and of long sighted people a little behind. The retina is the expansion of the nerve known as the optic nerve; it covers the whole of the interior surface of the eye-ball. It is of a dark color. Upon it is projected an inverse, or upside down image of the object looked at. When the light falls upon it, it experiences certain sensations which it transmits to the brain, creating their impressions of light, shade, form and color. The cornea and crystalline lens indulges various changes of form to correspond with the varying distances of the object presented to the eye from it. When light coming to the eye is steady and neither too brilliant nor too weak the functions of the eye are performed easily and without distress. But when the light is very brilliant or very dim, or when the alternations from one of these conditions to the other are frequent and sudden, the effort of the eye to accommodate themselves to the varying conditions speedily wearies and finally exhausts them. When the light is too brilliant the pupil is too much contracted, the muscles lose their power, it their efforts are long protracted and the pupil dilates admitting so much light to the sensitive retina as to cause inflamation, disease and blindness. When the light is feeble the pupil opens as widely as possible, the muscles taxed to their utmost limit of exertion, soon give out, refuse to perform their duty, and disease follows. But that which soonest and most surely injures the eye is unsteady or flickering light which is one moment brilliant and the next dim. When this is the case the eye muscles are constantly and violently strained now to contract, now to expand the pupil. The retina is at one instant flooded with light and at the next with darkness. The changes are so sudden and violent that the pupil and crystalline lens cannot follow them, and only pain and inflamation result from their vain attempts to do so. Sudden change in the distance at which the object presented to the eye is from it effects that organ almost as injuriously as flickering light. Each change in the distance of the object looked at is followed by a change in the shape of the cornea and crystalline lens. This change though slight, if frequently repeated wearies and finally exhausts the eye. From what has thus been said it may be easily inferred that reading or sewing by lamp or candle light. When the flame flickers it gives too dim a light which is highly injurious. Equally so is the permiscious habit, only too commonly indulged in, of reading by fire light which never is steady, or after sunset, by twilight when the light is so feeble as scarcely to make print visible. The common costom of reading while walking or riding is no less hurtful, and perhaps it may be even more so, for both the light and local distance are constantly varying. A great deal more might be added to what we have already said touching the effect of color and heat upon the eye, but this article is now much longer than it was designed to be, and this part of the subject must not be approached.

The government are considering what disposition to make of the sixty hostile Nez Perces who escaped the general slaughter in the recent war. If the Sioux get a nice reservation, plug hats, $40 apiece and the etceteras, of course the NezPerces ought not to be treated differently.

Gov. Williams of Indiana has appointed Dan Voorhees U. S. Senator to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Senator Morton. The Gov. has made a happy selection and one that will fully satisfy the Democracy throughout the land, but will strike terror to the hearts of Republicans

ELECTION BETS DECIDED.—According to the Goshen correspondent of the Chicago Times, three juries have decided, in civil suits resulting from election wagers, that Tilden was elected President. There cannot be a properly informed man in the United States who doubts that Tilden was elected. A jury that should decide otherwise would so decide in contradiction of unquestionable facts and in violation of their oaths.—Jacksonville Times.

Deputy U. S. Marshall Burns has been to Baker City making arrests for cutting timber on the public lands.

If Government will not survey the timbered lands so that persons can purchase as we are prohibited from taking the timber for mining and domestic purposes, this whole country had as well be turned over to the Indians for it will be utterly impossible for any white persons to live east of the Cascade Mountains. But we suppose the U. S. Marshal saw some money in it

A Grievous Error.

We regret to hear that Frank Baker, son of W. W. Baker, formerly of this place, has been sentenced by Judge Shattuck to one year's imprisonment in the state penitentiary. Crime, larceny. The way of the transgressor is hard. Wonder where he got his start.—La Grande Gazette.

In justice to Frank C. Baker, a young gentleman well and favorably known in this city, and to whom the above evidently refers, we would respectfully inform the writer that he is decidedly wrong in his surmises. The Frank Baker sentenced to the penitentiary is another fellow altogether. "Frank C." is not one of that class by any means, and the writer thereof should have used more discretion than displayed in the above, and should recollect that there is more than one Frank Baker in the world, and not accuse innocent parties of such glaring crimes. Please retract.—Ed.

Nez-Perce Indians, Vouchers &c.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE COLUMBIA, PORTLAND, OREGON, November 7, 1877.

SPECIAL ORDERS, No. 165.

Whereas, It is officially reported that many officers, whose temporary functions in connection with the late expedition against hostile Nez-Perce Indians terminate with expedition itself, are in receipt of vouchers, certificates, and other papers, formal and informal, relating to expenditures incurred during the Indian campaign; to the end there may be a recognized center for the reception, care and preservation of all such floating and straggling papers: It is ordered, that a book of claims be opened and kept in the offices of the Chief Quartermaster and Chief Commissary of subsistence at these headquarters, in which all vouchers, certificates, &c., pertaining to these respective Staff Departments, shall be entered with a synoptical history of each case so far as known or as information concerning it can be obtained, and the papers themselves be systematically arranged and disposed of distinct from the ordinary files of these offices.

It is requested that all persons having papers of the character described, in their possession, forward them to the offices above indicated for the purpose of their proper disposal and more speedy adjustment.

By command of Brigadier General Howard: H. CLAY WOOD, Assistant Adjutant General.

Official: W. L. WILKINSON, Aide-de-Camp.

Union County Items.

(From our exchanges.)

Ten teams left here this week for Columbia river, to commence work on the B. M. C. R. R. R., not for the purpose of grading only a few miles, but of continuing the work until the road is completed to this valley. This is the first real work that has ever been done looking toward opening up and developing that portion of Eastern Oregon east of Umatilla city. That success will attend the enterprise we have no doubt.

S. G. French, President, James H Slater, James H. Rinehart, W. J. Snodgrass and Daniel Chaplin, Directors of the B. M. C. R. R. Co., left La Grande yesterday morning for Umatilla City for the purpose of superintending the first breaking of the ground for work on the Railroad from Umatilla to La Grande.

M. H. Abbott returned last Saturday from a two week's trip to Pendleton, Weston, Walla Walla, Dayton, Umatilla, The Dalles and Portland.

James H. Slater returned home last Saturday from a two week's session of the Circuit Court at Pendleton.

The weather has been very changeable for the past few weeks—snow, rain and sunshine intermingled.

The Catherine Creek bridge has been rebuilt, and is now in good condition for teams crossing.

During the past working season the snag boat has removed from the channel in the Wilamette river 1,025 trees, stumps ect., besides cutting from the river many trees which would have soon fallen and given trouble. This is the largest amount of work ever accomplished by the snag boat in one season.

Five sailors were arrested not long since in Portland and locked up in the city jail. The captain alleges that the sailors refuse to work when requested to do so by him.
