If with two ladies, on a summer's day,
You sit slone, at luncheon or at tes,
And think, if one of them were but away
(A mile or so,) how happy you would be;
Yet find your wits in such a giddy whiri,
You scarcely speak to her you're thinking of,
But prattle gaily with the other girl
There's reason for supposing you're in love!

If all at once, your amatory pen
(Which no er before attempted lyric lines,
"Invita muss"—bane of gods and men ')
To fervid song and madrigal inclines,
Wherein you rashly rhyne of "youth" and "truth,"
And call your subject "darling," "duck," or "dove."
Or sadly beg some cruel-lady's rath—
The symptom is unfailing—your in love!

H, of her sex no other you can find One-half so bright or beautiful as she;
If to ber failings you are wholly blind,
(The faults, I mean, that other people see")
If in her "pug," you see a "grecian nose,

A BEAR ADVENTURE.

Dick Barron was one of the most daring among the pioneers, and he appeared to be one of the most unfortunate. Together with others of his neighbors, he removed from Central Colorado to the western slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. His home was in a wildly romantic and beautiful spot and fortune seemed to smile on him so far as his pecuniary matters were concerned; for his land yielded well in the summer, and the mines gave a fair yield of "yellow dross" during the colder months of the year.

But death came to the family of Dick. The first stroke fell upon his eldest boy, a lad of twelve years of age. The little fellow was fond of hunting, and with his rifle would frequently venture a considerable distance from his home, and sometimes was quite successful in bringing down small game. But one day he was absent much beyond his usual time, and a search discovered his mangled remains lying at the bottom of a ledge of rocks. He had evidently fallen from above, and thus met a sudden and cruel death. The blow fell heavily upon Dick and his wife, but the man bore bravely up under his grief, while the woman gave way to melancholy.

Not long after a second child, a girl of five years of age sickened and died. It now appeared as if Mrs. Barron would go mad, and for a time her agony was terrible to behold But this gradually subsided, and the mother began to sink rapidly, and in a short time she followed her little one, leaving still another child a daughter three years of age, to the care of the grief-stricken father.
