A Brave Boy.

It was a stormy evening in January. It had been very cold all day, but toward night it grew warmer, clouds came up rapidly from the northeast, and now it was snowing. Freddie Johnson, a bright, chubby little fellow of six years, was sitting by the fire looking at the pictures in the last Nursery, when his papa said, "Come Freddie, I am poing to write a letter which I wish you put on your coat and bat. The letter will be ready as soon as you are."

"All right," said Freddie, who was no customed to obey without asking questions-a rare trait in a little boy.

Now, the post office was half a mile distant, and Freddie had never been there alone, though he had often gone with his papa; but he was a courageous little fellow, and very proud of doing errands for his papa, so he did as he was bidden, and with his mamma's help was soon muffled up to his chin in overcont and scarf, and when he came back for the letter looked as if he could defy any

As soon as Freddie had left the house his papa had hastily put on his overcost and hat and hurried after him. Walk ing on the opposite side of the street, and a ltatle behind, he followed Fredhad nearly reached home, Mr. Johnson burried ahead, and was salmly reading his paper when Freddle came in, looking more like the snow man he had built in the yard than like Freddie Johnson.
