Heroes and Martyrs.

Two colored laborers, named Telfair and Stewart, went down into a fire-well in Charleston on Thursday morning. A few moments later, overcome by poisonous vapors, they were lying in the mud and water gasping for breath. A colored laborer named Simmons hastened to their relief. As soon as he felt the first effects of the noxious gas he was hauled out. Undismayed, a colored man named Robertson insisted upon being lowered into the well. As he touched the bottom he fell forward as if smothered. There were now three helpless men in the well. Volunteers were not wanting. A colored man named Seymour descended into the depths, and fell as those who preceded him had done.

Stewart, one of the two men who went down to clean out the well, was taken out alive. Telfair, his companion, was dead. The two, Stewart and Telfair, were engaged in their usual work. Robertson and Seymour, who endeavored to save the men, were removed. They died for their friends. Brave and loyal hearts had thrived under their dusky skin. Knowing that they risked their lives, they demanded that they be allowed to make an effort to rescue the men of their own race who were breathing their last. They shared the lot of the man whom they hoped to preserve to his wife and children. There own wives are widows, and their children are orphans.

When white men bear themselves as Seymour and Robertson did, their names ring through the land as heroes and martyrs. Shall less honor be paid to the two colored men who, with no hope of reward or expectation of fame, sacrificed their lives on the altar of humanity? They are heroes and martyrs—an honor, and example and we trust an inspiration to their race. The spirit of true freedom is indeed at work in the world, and the colored laborer can rise to such a height!

But something more is needed than words of praise. The men who gave up their lives for their comrades, the laborer who died for his post and the laborer who narrowly escaped and was sent to the hospital were the sole support of their families. For their relief, a Charleston firm, who insist that their names shall not be known, sent us last night $50. They say: "Lift out of these men while at honest labor and we hope the charitable of our city will see that their families are not wholly penniless and destitute." From another source we have received $20 with a similar message. We trust other citizens will follow these good examples.

It will give us unfeigned pleasure to see that the contributions are properly applied.

The Oyster and the Time to Eat Him.

An oyster has to be taken as a whole and respected as such. It refuses to be dealt with in detail, and he who attempts it makes a gastronomic failure of no small magnitude. There is only one way in which an oyster can be eaten. There it lies on the shell, hard, white and plump, its convoluted edges matching the rim of the shell. You pass the thin blade of your knife carefully under it and release the fibrous heart from its pearly connection. Then you lay your knife down, take the frontal between it up in an instant, your eyes, delicious to sense to your eyes, as it glides coming once, and felt the full physical rapture of it, has one memory, at least, that will never die while the senses of the palate remain. Not only is there a proper way to eat an oyster, but there is also a proper way to prepare an oyster to be eaten. And as regards roasting, this is the way: First and foremost among the requisites is a good old-fashioned fireplace, with its stone hearth, its stout, brazen andirons, its white ashes, its glowing bed of coals, and its bright, blazing sticks. The silence of expectation falls upon the group. Every eye is fastened on the bivalves. Whiz, buzz, sputter, bang! Now the sport begins. Now the explosions follow each other! How the tongues fly in and out of the fire! How the plates rattle! How the jokes fly! How the laughter bursts out and peals through the old home! How the chimney roars! How the bread and butter and cider vanish!
