Mr. Harnish, who pronounced him self a progressive socialist, said the men who control the trusts, have, by their methods of organizing and conducting their business, done more to demonstrate the value of co-operation than any other agency the world has ever known. They have pointed out a method of procedure to the laboring people, but the co-operation of the laboring classes, he said, would be designed to benefit the many instead of the few. Along this line, Mr. Cadwell said the members of the Car penters' union are planning to buy up timber land, with the 'dea of having a co-operative sawmill of their own to manufacture every class of lumber handled by them in their work.
