He finds public sentiment so bithe turns his blighting venom upon labor, thinking to divert attention from the real source of wrong.

The great combines are making their last stand. The active sentiment of all classes of people is against them. Hill's empty accusation does not blind a single person to the truth.

If a panic comes, it will be through the machinations of the trusts. It will be invited by the organic rottenness of the law that permits them to gather the utilities of the nation into pools, for private gain.

As the titled lords and privileged few of England exploited her priceless industries and resources and ment back into the old methods so re brought ruination upon the most energetic people in Europe, so will the privileged few of this country, who are intrenched behind evil laws, reduce it to England's level. Capital, and not labor, holds the key to panics.
