CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF

In providing that the public lands shall be kept for, and passed to actual settlers only, and in laying plans through irrigation to make sure that those lands shall be productive, the very highest interests of all the ple and of the state are served in all possible ways. A republic may have too many people, in a few places, just as a man may have too much weight on two or three floors of a high building. What is needed is proportionate distribution of the people in the proper places. Thus far the law of attraction has been in full operation to certain parts of the republic. remains for the thrill of irrigation to continue this work of distribution. The out-of-the-way spots must be utilized to relieve the pressure from the cities .-P.v. William Wilkinson,
