Most of us are inclined to think that if our tasks were different it would be easier for us to be the sort of men and women that we ought to be. Yet every duty is an opportunity, and we need no other gymnasium for the development of our moral muscle than the work which falls to our hands today, whatever that work may be. If our present task does not help us to be more gentle, patient, kind and faithful it is exceedingly doubtful whether any other set of circumstances would work in us the ends of character. -Robert Whittaker in San Fran-
