Each life should be a light-house lamp, at night—
Forever reaching out to those at sea—
Forewarning them of hidden reefs that be,
Unseen, unknown to their uncertain sight!
And when the lamp glows dimly be it said,
Not that it shone for self upon the shore—
But let its glory be forever more.
That for Mankind the radiance was shed!
—Bert Hoffman.

If the past records of some of the candidates made public during the campaign, should prove to be true, the jail is yawning to receive them.

Candidates in Umatilla county have builded at least one monument to themselves during this campaign. A church has been built north of Freewater, principally from the charity of the fellows who couldn't refuse.

It is hoped that no editor in Umatilla county has any enemies left over from his supply of campaign matter. The flow of eloquence has been very regular and extremely warm. It will be awful to come down again to prosaic truthful news.

It looks now as if either McClellan of New York, or Folk of St. Louis will be nominated for president by the democratic convention, and in either instance, the country would witness one of the best races in the history of the two parties. Folk has a national reputation, and McClellan has an ancestry that would make him especially popular in all sections. Either of them will make a warm race for the "only Teddy," and while there seems to be every indication that Roosevelt will be the next president yet he will be given a race that he will remember. Even with his great popularity, there will be much of the race that will not be smooth sailing for him. He cannot reconcile the South to his negro policy. The Bookers T. Washington luncheon will always be a ghost in the closet of southern republicanism as long as Roosevelt is in office.

Whoever goes to the legislature from Umatilla county (and it now looks most favorable for the East Oregonian's ticket) one of the first bills that should be presented is one for the establishment of an agricultural district, comprising the counties of Umatilla and Morrow, with a fixed annual appropriation, just as the Baker, Union and Grant county district receives. The meeting should alternate between Pendleton and Heppner, and a local association should be formed as the basis for the legislative act. Umatilla county, that produces more wool, wheat and fruit than any other one county in the state, should have one of the best agricultural fairs in the state. This matter should not be allowed to rest, until the gates are opened for a first class agricultural fair in this city. Pendleton is out of the street carnival period. Umatilla county is entitled to something more than the "merry-go-round and a 'hochie koochie' dance.

The East Oregonian believes in the wheat pool, just as heartily as it believes in the wool pool. The wool pool has brought the members of the organization from 1 to 2 cents more than the same quality of wool sold at private sale. Not only does it directly benefit the producer by bringing higher prices, but it organizes and regulates the wool market, and fixes the sales in the great wool centers, as one of the events of the season. It gives a permanency and fixity to the wool market of Eastern Oregon which no haphazard private sales could ever give. The same will be true of the wheat pool. If the farmers of Umatilla county will organize into a wheatgrowers' association, with wheat sales dates, and refuse to sell outside of these dates, the banks of Umatilla county will see that every member of the association is carried until the sale, the exporters will look forward to this sale as the pivotal event in the harvest season, it will bring better prices to the farmers because of the rivalry among the buyers on the ground. Owing to the necessity of keeping the crop moving, after harvest once begins, instead of storing it all, sales could be fixed for twice each week, during the harvest season to give buyers a chance to supply immediate needs, and to relieve warehouses of an over-storage.

TOO MANY CHURCHES.

The East Oregonian believes that there are too many poorly paid ministers and too many weak churches in the world now.

The forces of Christianity are divided up, held apart and weakened by doctrinal differences. In many small towns four and five small congregations assemble in different churches on Sunday, each one denying itself some of the comforts of life in trying to maintain a separate organization and pay the four or five ministers uncertain salaries, that barely keep the households going.

If these four or five struggling churches were united in one spacious, modern building, could employ one minister and join their forces in supporting him in a manner that would place him above the worry for bread and butter, Christianity would be more powerful, more attractive, more promising to the world.

Many a good man hesitates to join a church because of the shaky financial condition of the church and the constant grind upon the small membership for the support of the independent organization.

Many a preacher gives up his vocation in despair, or engages in some "side line," because of the inability of the organization to pay him a living salary.

All churches worship the same Maker, expect to gain the same heaven through the same redeeming force, yet they stand apart, divide up the aggregate strength into an infinite number of struggling atoms and retard the progress of the Christian system by internal divisions.

Take for example a city with eight different churches. At a value of $5,000 each for church property, $40,000 is thus exempt from taxation and the community must make up this deficit; for the support of the eight ministers at least $8,000 per year is imposed upon the divided membership, to say nothing of the thousands of dollars for the incidental expenses of auxiliary organizations to each church. The financial drain on this divided membership is something surprising. It is more than many of the members can bear, in justice to their families.

One house of worship could serve that entire community. One able minister with a corps of active workers to assist him could attend to the spiritual needs of those eight small congregations. The cost of maintaining that one organization would fall less heavily upon the members. More zeal, more cheerfulness, more downright religious activity would be felt and the sum total of Christian achievement would be increased through this united effort.

Where there is one broad, free highway leading to the mill, why will people persist in traveling the devious, rocky, foothill roads, on which they must pay extra toll and travel extra miles to reach the same mill with the same kind of wheat at the same price?

There are not too many church members, but there are too many churches.

Lewiston, Idaho, has a commercial association with a membership of about 300, with $1 per month dues, and a small initiation fee. Lewiston has less population than Pendleton, less immediate resources and is more isolated from the world, because of her location off the through lines of railroad, yet she is leading Pendleton in a commercial way. She is now preparing to build a magnificent public building, in which the commercial association, city council, women organizations and all other public bodies will have quarters. It is a subject worthy of the consideration of this city. There are more than 100 young men and business men eligible to the Pendleton association, who should be inside.

SOLIDARITY.

I marvel often, that men are so slow to honor heartily, in act and speech, the truth with which creation is aglow.

The good of all is in the good of each.

How shall they doubt it who themselves are made
Of many members woven into one?
Nor know an aching finger unafraid,
But by a single nerve are all united?

How shall they doubt it who have kenned the stars?
Or caught the messages of leaves and grass?
Since never discord yonder music mars,
And every atom answers to the mass.

How shall they doubt it who have sipped of love?
Or tasted of the joy of doing good?
The wine of service from the feast above,
The finest portion of the angels' food.

Within, without, above us or below,
The word is everywhere from self to sun,
Only the loving may its meaning know,
But who so blind he feels not we are one?

—Robert Whitaker.

THE GAMBLERS' ALLY.

A railroad company could not, it is true, be expected to use extraordinary vigilance to see that burglars never purchased tickets or rode on passenger trains from one city to another. But a railroad company that should go into the business of organizing a service of special night trains to enable bank robbers to escape, with the understanding that it should receive a very large part of the average profits of safekeeping, would be engaged in a distinct departure from the function of a common carrier. There is no law in the analogy.

The Western Union Telegraph Company, well knowing that the carrying on of the pool room business is a crime in New York, as it is in most states of the Union, had nevertheless acquired a monopoly of the collection and sale of the commodity which alone makes pool rooms possible, and had then gone deliberately into the business of helping the pool rooms to evade the officers of the law, on condition of sharing largely in their ill-gotten gains.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.
