

THE GOSPEL REVIEWED.

We last week enjoyed the pleasure of announcing to the reading public that our friend of the Herald was getting "piou."

Last week he gladdened our heart and gave us material for a good article by quoting at random some half dozen Bible verses about woman, said quotations being chosen from different books of the Bible, all the way from Genesis to Corinthians.

But there before us sat nearly two score of ladies, who, to our own certain knowledge, had been wearing for the last half-dozen years a much better and heavier weight of fixtures, in a frightful chignon, than man had ever worn in the hat; and there was not a female in the hall, while one man in every four displayed either a perfectly bald forehead, a small, round, vacant crown-piece or an entirely denuded cranium.

Apparently the "hot hat" theory must be abandoned. Hot head gear had not destroyed the hair of women, and of course the same rule would apply to men.

At any rate she was in the witness of grape culture: "With the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard."

Work in the open air was good for her constitution. "She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms."

Her hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The Woman's Suffrage Convention for the Pacific Coast is now in session in San Francisco. There are forty-two delegates, of both sexes, in attendance.

Girls of the period—female compositions. Several ladies have gone to work in an earnest to canvass for our paper and secure for themselves some of our valuable premiums.

BALDNESS.

One day, during the last gubernatorial contest, we repaired to a scene of discussion for the purpose of "asking items." About three hundred men were present, all ranged together in rows, while perhaps thirty ladies occupied an oblique corner of the men, and rather behind them, so that the backs and tops of the long lines of masculine craniums were visible.

But there before us sat nearly two score of ladies, who, to our own certain knowledge, had been wearing for the last half-dozen years a much better and heavier weight of fixtures, in a frightful chignon, than man had ever worn in the hat; and there was not a female in the hall, while one man in every four displayed either a perfectly bald forehead, a small, round, vacant crown-piece or an entirely denuded cranium.

Apparently the "hot hat" theory must be abandoned. Hot head gear had not destroyed the hair of women, and of course the same rule would apply to men.

At any rate she was in the witness of grape culture: "With the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard."

Work in the open air was good for her constitution. "She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms."

Her hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

MAN'S IDEAL OF WOMAN.

When we tell of their ideal of a woman is a good cook, a housewife, a gentle, soothing, innocent, pure creature, whose business it is to stay at home and mind the babies, we reply that that is all very well as far as it goes, but it is not deep enough, or high enough, or broad enough.

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

BARBERS AND PREMIUMS.

Several ladies have gone to work in an earnest to canvass for our paper and secure for themselves some of our valuable premiums. We have had the pleasure of giving credit for several subscriptions procured for us by ladies in different localities, who are confident of procuring either sewing machines or organs.

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

Several ladies have gone to work in an earnest to canvass for our paper and secure for themselves some of our valuable premiums. We have had the pleasure of giving credit for several subscriptions procured for us by ladies in different localities, who are confident of procuring either sewing machines or organs.

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

WOMEN AND WINE.

According to the best British journals, medical and literary, the fact no longer admits of doubt that ladies in wealthier circles of refined society in England are leading lives of so much excitement as rapidly to foster among them the use of intoxicating stimulants, variously to their physical and moral well-being.

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

WOMEN AND WINE.

According to the best British journals, medical and literary, the fact no longer admits of doubt that ladies in wealthier circles of refined society in England are leading lives of so much excitement as rapidly to foster among them the use of intoxicating stimulants, variously to their physical and moral well-being.

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."

Our readers will please take notice that this practical sermon was like the result of our attendance at a political meeting. Next week we shall tell you about the first political meeting we ever attended and what came of our going.

We are happy to announce the receipt of a goodly number of exchanges, all of which have met our venture with a spirit of liberality and fair dealing which is at once gratifying and reassuring.

The hair of men and boys being kept closely cropped from childhood, and being kept additionally covered with a hat impervious to the atmosphere and light, grows diseased and stinky when it should be in its fullest vigor.

She possessed domestic qualifications, also, in keeping with her day and generation. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff."

She could and did make speeches upon occasions, and her words were wise and tempered with kindness. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

We are glad our neighbor of the Herald agrees with us. Like him, we think the above extracts really give "the finest description of the true woman in her proper sphere that we have ever seen anywhere."