THE HARVEST SEASON.

The harvest season, that dread of so many farmers' wives, is again near at hand, with its busy toil in the hottest days of all the year. The introduction of machinery has rendered the labor of threshers, etc., have taken the place of the hardest manual labor. But with the woman farmer the case is different. With her it is the same old routine of bake and stew and scrub from morn till eve. Seldom is any help hired for her department, even though there be ten, fifteen or twenty men hired for whom cooking must be done. This state of affairs is altogether wrong. The wife is as much entitled to adequate help as the busband, and should have it.

Many farmers do not mean to overwork their wives, and we wish to call their attention, in the kindest manner possible, to the fact that they do, feeling confident that as soon as they perceive the injustice done they will immediately rectify it. Thousands of farmers' wives annually go down to their graves ere the prime of life is reached, victims of over-work. This is the only true explanation that can be given of the extraordinary mortality among our farmer women, who ought to be the healthiest in the coun-

Then heed our advice, O farmer wise, and no more let your spouse be the victim of over-work during harvest season or any other time. Be sure that she is as well provided with help as you are, and that she rises from her slumbers refreshed and invigorated equally as much as yourself. By so doing you will prolong the life of the one whom you cherish, or should cherish, most of all on earth, and your children will rise up and call you blessed.
