DECEMBER 13, 1872.

These lectures, which began as a sort solicitious misgivings, are succeeding so far beyond our humble expectations that we have decided to continue them as long as they are largely attended, or at least until our necessary home demand for bread and become so urgent as to compel us to absent ourself from the city for weeks together. Our main source of revenue during the past year has been derived from village lectures. Everybody knows there is no money in a weekly newspaper outside of its expenses, neither are the collections sufficient in city lectures to more than defray expenses of hall, advertising, light and fuel; but our heart is in this city work, and just as long as we can afford it, we shall be found regularly at our
