One of the saddest things we have seen recorded for a long time was the case of a boy fifteen years of age, arrested and imprisoned in New York the other day, on the charge of being drunk, yet who had not taken liquor. On an John A. Wonack investigation of the case it was discovered that before the boy was born his father had been a habitual but secret drunkard, and when the fact was made known to the wife it almost deprived her of reason. Her child was born, and grew up bearing all the outward appearances of being a drunkard, though rigidly temperate.
