HOME NEWS.

Religious meetings continue in the various churches of the city with interest unabated.

Bradley, Marsh & Co. delight their numerous patrons by the low rates at which they dispose of their seasonal goods.

Mrs. Dr. Thompson, of this city, who has been absent for some weeks on a trip to Honolulu, returned home by the Falkirk.

Dr. L. L. Rowland, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, has been visiting the Public Schools of this city professionally during the past few days.

If your clock has grown sullen, or you've refused to perform duty this cold weather, take it to John A. Beck, 105 Front street, and he will put it in splendid order.

Schumer Brothers, No. 65 First street, still supply their patrons with candlesticks and everything in their line at low rates. Call for a plate of their delicious oysters.

Pearless Lodge, L. O. G. T., will give a social and literary entertainment at their Hall, corner of Third and Alder streets, on the evening of the 11th inst. The public are cordially invited.

The officers of the O. S. S. Company have telegraphed to San Francisco that the Columbia would probably be open by Sunday; so the steamship Oriflame will doubtless arrive at this port in a few days.

Wm. Beck & Son are prepared to furnish sportsmen with everything in their line, from a splendid rifle to a fishhook; from a charge of powder to a pocket knife. Call at the Sportsman's Emporium, 105 Front street, and inspect their "killing stock."

On Saturday last County Treasurer F. Harbaugh paid into the State Treasury $30,000 toward the tax of Multnomah county, $2,000 that remained in the Treasury was added to the $28,000 collected by Sheriff Jeffery, leaving still unpaid about $25,000.

A. F. Smith & Co. are succeeding admirably in the introduction of their splendid instruments—the Safety organ and Auto-piano, in this State and Washington Territory. All purchasers are delighted with their instruments. Ware-rooms, 105 Front street.

The officers of Nonpareil Lodge, I. O. G. T., were publicly installed by Mr. R. L. D. on the evening of the 3d inst. The Hall was well filled by members and friends of the Order, who after the ceremony adjourned to the hotel for a delightful social hour. This was in turn succeeded by a dance, which was much enjoyed by those who delight in this amusement. All present seemed to enjoy the occasion fully.

Much credit is due to Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Jones, of this city, for their humane and untiring efforts in raising funds to get the poor Jeffery, the stranger sailor boy who had drowned on Saturday, a respectable burial. The necessary sum was raised, mainly by the exertions of the persons named, on Wednesday, and on Thursday the remains were quietly laid away in Lone Fir Cemetery, instead of being buried in Potter's Field, as they would have been but for these humane efforts.

Three convicts, J. D. Brown, Thomas Malone and James Murphy, escaped from the State Prison on the evening of January 28th. The two last named were recaptured on the day following, about six miles east of Marion Station, and returned to their old quarters at Salem.

From the Bulletin of Wednesday: On Tuesday, January 6th, the Nicaraguan ship Pelicano was lost at the west end of Neat Bay. She was from Callao, 50 days out, and on her way to Tacoma for a load of lumber with which to return to Callao. Kept out of the Straits by long-continued adverse winds, with a fleet of other vessels, the ship eventually ran into Neat Bay, for the slight protection it was thought might there be secured from the raging storm. The wind came around from the northeast, however, accompanied by a furious fall of snow, concealing from sight, though in the light hours of the day, all objects more than one-third the ship's length distant. With this change she was in the most exposed condition possible, and Capt. Dam staves realized the necessity of putting her out on the open water of the Pacific. While wearing ship, in the endeavor to do this, the Pelicano got on the rocks. She was beaten so badly by the waves that the rocks were forced through her bottom, and have since firmly held the vessel in that position. She was a staunch-built ship, and is said to be otherwise injured in but a small degree, notwithstanding her terrible encounter with the rocks. The wrecked ship is to be sold at Port Townsend to-day; as she lies stranded in the bay. She was built at Quebec in 1856, of oak and hickory-mast, for the copper trade between Chile and Wales, in which she was engaged for twelve years. Her length was 165 feet; her breadth of beam 32 feet; her depth of hold 20 feet; her registered tonnage 745, and her carrying capacity 800,000 feet of lumber. She was a good ship, worth at least $25,000 before her accident. She cannot be moved, and is of value only to the professional wrecker or to the owner of ships. Everything will be sold with her stores, furnishings, rigging, etc.
