

M. A. J. DUNWAY, Editor and Proprietor

OFFICE-COR. FRONT & WASHINGTON STREETS

TERMS IN ADVANCE: One Year $5.00, 3 months $1.75, Three months 1.00

ADVERTISEMENTS inserted on reasonable terms

MARTHA MARBLEHEAD: The Maid and Mistress of Chehalis

By Mrs. A. J. DUNWAY, AUTHOR OF "JUDITH BETS," "ELLEN DOWD," "AMIE AND HENRY LEE," "THE HAPPY HOME," "ONE WOMAN'S SPORE," "MAJOR MOHNIEN," "ETC., ETC., ETC."

CHAPTER XXIII

Major Marblehead was wearied with the weighty matters of the law. Not that his official duties were at all burdensome. Indeed, his principal occupation had all along been limited to the regular drawing of his salary; and this his obliging son-in-law had usually secured for him. But he sighed for such distinction as a man of strong will, little money, and narrow mental calibre can only secure in the rural districts.

Major Marblehead was weary with the weighty matters of the law. Not that his official duties were at all burdensome. Indeed, his principal occupation had all along been limited to the regular drawing of his salary; and this his obliging son-in-law had usually secured for him. But he sighed for such distinction as a man of strong will, little money, and narrow mental calibre can only secure in the rural districts.

Major Marblehead had passed a sleepless night. For days he had been strolling his courage, not to reach the resigning point in his political career, but to break the proposed resignation to his wife, who ruled him, as do all women who profess contented and unreasoning political allegiance to all men. He had tried, the very day before, to join in the doxology in church, and had been gently reminded by an impertinent usher in white kids and a fob chain that he was singing out of time and tune, invoking general attention and open ridicule upon his honor and sanctimonious effort to lead the praises of Jehovah in the sanctuary.

Mrs. Marblehead had nudged and grimaced at him in vain, and was ineffectually relieved when the usher interfered.

Not so the Major. He was humiliated, outraged, angered. The triumphant glance his wife threw at him when his vote died out was an unwise stroke of policy on her part that sealed her fate. The Major kept his own counsel till the morning, passing, as I have said, a sleepless night. And then he tendered his resignation, which it is needless to say, was unconditionally accepted.

The deed accomplished, the Major felt relieved. But there was yet a formidable work to do. In his dilemma he consulted the Honorable Thomas Jones, whose aid he sought in breaking the news to the real head of the family, first quieting that functionary's indignant opposition by informing him that he was himself to be his fortunate successor.

"The old woman! I'll fume and fret like the very devil, Tom. But break it to her as gently as you can, and let her know that I'm not to be trifled with, won't you?"

Tom curled his lip with a contemptuous sneer. He knew as well as did Major Marblehead that the shivering, hesitating man before him had been "trifled with" all along his later married years, and he keenly enjoyed his father-in-law's humiliation, for he thoroughly despised him.

Sons and daughters seldom take kindly to such relations; if grown to maturity or near it when the relations begin; and the step parent who triumphs over the natural animosities entailed by such an alliance must be a paragon in all the virtues. And the reader knows that Major Marblehead was a paragon was not a success.

"What, Tom? After all the patronage you're received from my hands? And even now you're receiving promo-

The New Northwest

VOLUME VII. PORTLAND, OREGON, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1877. NUMBER 13.

MARTHA MARBLEHEAD

The Maid and Mistress of Chehalis

By Mrs. A. J. DUNWAY, AUTHOR OF "JUDITH BETS," "ELLEN DOWD," "AMIE AND HENRY LEE," "THE HAPPY HOME," "ONE WOMAN'S SPORE," "MAJOR MOHNIEN," "ETC., ETC., ETC."

CHAPTER XXIII

Major Marblehead was wearied with the weighty matters of the law. Not that his official duties were at all burdensome. Indeed, his principal occupation had all along been limited to the regular drawing of his salary; and this his obliging son-in-law had usually secured for him. But he sighed for such distinction as a man of strong will, little money, and narrow mental calibre can only secure in the rural districts.

Major Marblehead was weary with the weighty matters of the law. Not that his official duties were at all burdensome. Indeed, his principal occupation had all along been limited to the regular drawing of his salary; and this his obliging son-in-law had usually secured for him. But he sighed for such distinction as a man of strong will, little money, and narrow mental calibre can only secure in the rural districts.

Major Marblehead had passed a sleepless night. For days he had been strolling his courage, not to reach the resigning point in his political career, but to break the proposed resignation to his wife, who ruled him, as do all women who profess contented and unreasoning political allegiance to all men. He had tried, the very day before, to join in the doxology in church, and had been gently reminded by an impertinent usher in white kids and a fob chain that he was singing out of time and tune, invoking general attention and open ridicule upon his honor and sanctimonious effort to lead the praises of Jehovah in the sanctuary.

Mrs. Marblehead had nudged and grimaced at him in vain, and was ineffectually relieved when the usher interfered.

Not so the Major. He was humiliated, outraged, angered. The triumphant glance his wife threw at him when his vote died out was an unwise stroke of policy on her part that sealed her fate. The Major kept his own counsel till the morning, passing, as I have said, a sleepless night. And then he tendered his resignation, which it is needless to say, was unconditionally accepted.

The deed accomplished, the Major felt relieved. But there was yet a formidable work to do. In his dilemma he consulted the Honorable Thomas Jones, whose aid he sought in breaking the news to the real head of the family, first quieting that functionary's indignant opposition by informing him that he was himself to be his fortunate successor.

"The old woman! I'll fume and fret like the very devil, Tom. But break it to her as gently as you can, and let her know that I'm not to be trifled with, won't you?"

Tom curled his lip with a contemptuous sneer. He knew as well as did Major Marblehead that the shivering, hesitating man before him had been "trifled with" all along his later married years, and he keenly enjoyed his father-in-law's humiliation, for he thoroughly despised him.

Sons and daughters seldom take kindly to such relations; if grown to maturity or near it when the relations begin; and the step parent who triumphs over the natural animosities entailed by such an alliance must be a paragon in all the virtues. And the reader knows that Major Marblehead was a paragon was not a success.

"What, Tom? After all the patronage you're received from my hands? And even now you're receiving promo-

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

To THE EDITOR OF THE NEW NORTHWEST:

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

The anti-resumption bill is still in suspense, though Mr. Ewing made the closing speech yesterday. It has had so many reverses and has become so nearly a changing target that what will be the result finally we will not now pretend to indicate.

Cleopatra's Needle

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture...

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

A sea-going obelisk is such an anomaly in the history of architecture. It would have been extremely respect the huge monolith now on its way to England to escape without at least one marine adventure.

Taking a Swordfish

FEARFUL STRUGGLE WITH AN AIR-TIGHT BARREL ATTACHED TO A HARPOON.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention...

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

It was some time before we could distinguish the speck, rising and falling with the sea, which attracted the old whaler's attention. Still he pronounced it a "shab," and, after putting us on the other tack to run down party to leeward of it, went below to bring up the iron.

How to be Handsome

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a handsome face and attracts you by good looks. They prefer to be good-looking rather than to be rich or powerful.

A Journal for the People. Devoted to the Interests of Humanity. Independent in Politics and Religion. Alive to all Live Issues, and Thoroughly Medical in Opposing and Exposing the Wrong of the Masses.

Correspondents writing over assumed signatures must sign their names to the Editor, or no attention will be given to their communications.

ADVERTISEMENTS inserted on reasonable terms

MARTHA MARBLEHEAD: The Maid and Mistress of Chehalis

By Mrs. A. J. DUNWAY, AUTHOR OF "JUDITH BETS," "ELLEN DOWD," "AMIE AND HENRY LEE," "THE HAPPY HOME," "ONE WOMAN'S SPORE," "MAJOR MOHNIEN," "ETC., ETC., ETC."

CHAPTER XXIII

Major Marblehead was wearied with the weighty matters of the law. Not that his official duties were at all burdensome. Indeed, his principal occupation had all along been limited to the regular drawing of his salary; and this his obliging son-in-law had usually secured for him. But he sighed for such distinction as a man of strong will, little money, and narrow mental calibre can only secure in the rural districts.

Major Marblehead was weary with the weighty matters of the law. Not that his official duties were at all burdensome. Indeed, his principal occupation had all along been limited to the regular drawing of his salary; and this his obliging son-in-law had usually secured for him. But he sighed for such distinction as a man of strong will, little money, and narrow mental calibre can only secure in the rural districts.

Major Marblehead had passed a sleepless night. For days he had been strolling his courage, not to reach the resigning point in his political career, but to break the proposed resignation to his wife, who ruled him, as do all women who profess contented and unreasoning political allegiance to all men. He had tried, the very day before, to join in the doxology in church, and had been gently reminded by an impertinent usher in white kids and a fob chain that he was singing out of time and tune, invoking general attention and open ridicule upon his honor and sanctimonious effort to lead the praises of Jehovah in the sanctuary.

Mrs. Marblehead had nudged and grimaced at him in vain, and was ineffectually relieved when the usher interfered.

Not so the Major. He was humiliated, outraged, angered. The triumphant glance his wife threw at him when his vote died out was an unwise stroke of policy on her part that sealed her fate. The Major kept his own counsel till the morning, passing, as I have said, a sleepless night. And then he tendered his resignation, which it is needless to say, was unconditionally accepted.

The deed accomplished, the Major felt relieved. But there was yet a formidable work to do. In his dilemma he consulted the Honorable Thomas Jones, whose aid he sought in breaking the news to the real head of the family, first quieting that functionary's indignant opposition by informing him that he was himself to be his fortunate successor.

"The old woman! I'll fume and fret like the very devil, Tom. But break it to her as gently as you can, and let her know that I'm not to be trifled with, won't you?"

Tom curled his lip with a contemptuous sneer. He knew as well as did Major Marblehead that the shivering, hesitating man before him had been "trifled with" all along his later married years, and he keenly enjoyed his father-in-law's humiliation, for he thoroughly despised him.

Sons and daughters seldom take kindly to such relations; if grown to maturity or near it when the relations begin; and the step parent who triumphs over the natural animosities entailed by such an alliance must be a paragon in all the virtues. And the reader knows that Major Marblehead was a paragon was not a success.

"What, Tom? After all the patronage you're received from my hands? And even now you're receiving promo-