The light borns dim in the hall below; Nobody sets her standing, aying good-night again, soft and low, Half way up to the landing.

Nobody, only the eyes of brown, Tender and full of meaning, That smile on the fairest face in lown, Over the builsters leaning.

Tired and sleepy, with drooping head, I wonder why she Higers. And when all the good-nights are said! Why, somebody holds her fingers—

Holds her fingers and draws her down,

Suddenly growing bolder, Till her loose hair drops in masses brown, i. He a muntle, over nie shoulder.

Over the baulsters soft hands fair Brush his check like a feather; Bright brown tresses and dusky hair Meet and mingle together. There's a question asked, there's a swint caress; him." Young lady, are you one of that she has down like a bird from the hallway; but over the bankstore drops a "Year." That shall brighten the world for him alway.

That shall brighten the world for him alway.

GRANDMANNA'S MIRROR.

In this mirror—years ago,
Maybe sixty-five or so—
Peoped a maid,
Who was young and very fair,
Summer eyes and summy hele,
It is easil.

Stor's a little altered now.
There are wellakes on her brow.
And her bay
Is more silvery in hop.
In the eyes are kind and true,
As they were.

Only Inink, she saw herself Years ass, a pretty ell, Mirored before Through the very nine to know Where the pretty faces go, Year by year.

What a freestire there must be trisisten sensewhere, security. In this gloss, you'll know that prosty girks always triffs with their curis. As they pass.

And I constlines seem to trace There the stadow of a face Not my own; But no seemer do I strive To regard It as alive— It has flown.

Then I funcy I have seen demainment at severiles u. A deceil?
Tet it builds me up a dreum an the blust eyes, that seem Mine to meet.

Though I know it is ideal,
There is something very real
In the face;
Heaven bless me, there it is,

"How does the sea look?". "That depends," as a cautious inwyer or physician would properly say, on an Jacomplete presentation of a case to him, with the demand for an opinion. How the sea looks depends largely on the eyes that are looking at it.

One may suppose, for example, a group of railway engineers scanning the Atlantic; one of them looking at it as simply an extension of his road, requiring no repairs, and on which there are no taxes. There is no romance, but there might be some enterprise in a look of that kind.

But here is a little girl of seven summers, with fair curls, and eyes like the brightest part of the ocean. She is looking over the ship's motion left she are and water bits, and carries the light into the water at the ship's motion left he air and water mix, and carries the light into the water and so it leoks blue.

bottomed, jointed complication, closes his eyes and holds them tight, lest a glimpse of his formidable foe should reach him and suggest added horrors. The sea is not lovely—to him.

The young people who are standing at the stern, by the wheel-house, looking out for phosphorus, ostensibly, and one of whom is quoting Byron to the other—availing himself dexterously of a "piece" which he had to commit to memory as a penalty at school, or he would never have known it—how does the sea look to them? Why, they do not see it at all. They are not looking at it. Their faces, indeed, are toward it, but their thoughts are of themselves. He is thinking of her, she of him. He thinks her the softest, the sweetest and loveliest of her sex; and she thinks him one of the noblest, handsomest and most talented of men—wittees that no stry. one of the noblest, handsomest and most congregation, roared with laughter. talented of men-witness that poetry, now, with which he is entertaining her. what a mind he has!

Do you notice that tall man walking the deck, speaking to few, scanning the water and the sky occasionally, and then resuming his nervous walk? How does the sea look to him? He was three days ago seeing to his business, when a telegram was put into his hand. It ran thus: "Return immediately; Lucy sick."

Telegrams are concise. Lucy is his wife. They were married a couple of years ago. There is another Lucy in his home—a little one who can only crow and clap hands and kiss, but not speak, and country deacon went home one evening and complained to his wife that he had been abused down at the store shamefully. One of the neighbors, he said, had called him a lar. Her eyes diashed with indignation. "Why didn't you tell him to prove it?" "That's the tusband; "I told him to prove it, and he did prove it."

Beware of prejudices; they are like rats, and meu's minds are like traps.
