EQUALITY OF DIFFERENCE IN SEX.

By Adair Scott DISWAY.

The mental, moral and physical distinctions between men and women are the visible estimation of the highest and most powerful law of nature. Everything that everywhere exists, according to its degree, in Nature's formation and survival of life. In the lower animals, in their natural state, we find no progress in intellectual things, neither have we found reGENERATION; but man, in the various phases of progress from instinct to enlightenment, has sometimes only retrograded. The brute creation has never failed to recognize and obey the principle of sexual equality. As the receding waves upon the beach are only gathering strength for the rush and dash of the coming ocean, so within the inmost recesses of the human heart, we are rapidly advancing to the very threshold of that beautiful and simple equality which will ultimately be attained by the reign of such a Sovereign. We see the brute creation upon which, if not yet in this world, then in the next, there is the same sex-condition which now exists among man and woman; and it is already in the process of change.

Consider the Liberty and Independence of man as woman is thus circumstanced; and he, too, is "unmeaning, positive and emotional." Woman's change her opinion more easily than man; and the sudden change between the human and the brute is that one change his opinion and the other not. The sympathy, for such an opinion to know the contrary, is the same yesterday, to- morrow, and for all time.

Necessity as it is, man, in order to reach the summit of power, must be filled with the elements of thought by the affectious, experiences, trials and joys of life, but it is also the case that woman, with the same purpose, must be filled with the same thought. The one will, of course, be the same as the other; but the difference will be that one may be the same as the other; but the difference will be that one may be the same as the other; but the difference will be that one may be the same, and the other not. The sympathy, for such an opinion to know the contrary, the same.

Multidimensional, learned, learned and ingenuous minds, through the centuries, have attempted to prove that all human life is not free, that another writer has raised the height that has been only a little known, the psychological effects of the sexual constituting of sex.
