

Tonight I almost envy you Your quiet bed that seems Too narrow for the coming in

So when the earth is not too hard-A moist and pleasant mold— With dandelions here and there, Like scattered bits of gold,

Then maybe I shall break my way The earth and grasses through, And smiling with my drowsy eyes Shall come to sleep with you.

EAMOUS ENGLISH SWORDS

Some Noticeable Weapons That Are Exhibited In the Tower of London. Whoever visits the London Tower may enjoy a veritable feast of swords, but amid the numberless array of weapons there are one or two that are especially worthy of notice. There is the sword of state, which is girt on the monarch's side after his ancinting at the imposing ceremony of coronation, which girding is more honored in the breach, one would suppose, when the monarch is a lady. The sword is first consecrated by the primate, and by him handed to the lord chamberlain, who completes the function. It is a two handed weapon, with rich decorations on hilt and pommel and scabbard. Of scarcely less importance is the "sword of mercy," borne before the sovereign in the coronation procession. This sword is named Curtana, but though undoubtedly very ancient it can hardly claim to be the original Curtana forged by the famous

This original Curtana was the magic weapon of Ogier the Dane, bold knight of Charlemagne's most warlike days. Our own Curtana is in any case many centuries old. It is square pointed, with the look as though the point had been broken short; hence possibly its name. A fine gold wire covers its handle, and the scabbard is remarkably ornate. Two other swords are carried at the coronation ceremony-swords symbolical of spiritual and temporal justice, the first with an obtuse point, the latter sharp. Curtana and these two justice swords are not often called upon to make a publie appearance. It is happily more than a half century since they were last re- Changed to a quired at a coronation, but whenever the sovereign opens parliament in person the sword of state first mentioned is called from its repose.

The lord mayor's sword is even more familiar to the general public, and not only London, but most other corporations, have their sword and sword bearer. It is a picturesque survival of the be of a figurative character. Such is the Its Farm Features. mode by which the city of London sometimes does honor to those who have rento them swords of honor. These civic living. swords have been given to men like Lord Napier, Lord Clyde, Lord Wolsedon Standard.
