THE GOOD OF NEWSPAPERS.

There is not another power in the wide domain of human institutions that exercises as potent an influence latent forces in the social compact. It focalizes every impulse and every effort. It intensifies every moveinterest and warns the slothful of from costom house import returns. impending danger. It is the barometer of social changes. It is the thermometer that marks the temperature of social life. It is the sun that warms into life and causes to grow the innate germs of native intelligence. It furnishes the mental food that invigorates the mind and gives it force and directs its epergies.

This is not an exagerated picture. It is but an epitome of the incalculable power of the local newspaper. In its columns converge the rays of intelligence radiating from the (which is admitted by all well in- 1000 majority over Ladd, candidate formed persons), how important it is that the local papers, in turn, be well patronized by those who have the interest of themselves and of those around them at heart.

And yet, with all these benefits growing out of the local paper, it is the most meagerly supported of any business, considering the capital invested and the daily expenses of carrying it on, of any other enterprise engaged in. Other business enterprises, when times are dull, can curtail expenses by discharging help and a large amount of other incidental expenses. Not so in the newspaper business. It costs as much to Monday, the republicans made heavy get out an edition of a paper when gains. times are dull as it does when times are good. The same amount of paper, ink, and help is required in he who has nothing to sell. dull times as in good times.

The public is realy under great obligations to liberally support their Do local paper for the good it is doing them, both as a public and a private. benefactor. Suspend the local paper the annual meeting of the stockholders of any town six months and that of the Douglas County Building and moral grave yard.

A preacher once said that no newspaper that told the truth could be a pecuniary success. We may say, by way of returning the compliment, that the minister who will tell at all times and under all circumstances, the truth about his members, dead or alive, will not occupy his pulpit long. The press and the pulpit go hand in hand; with washtnb, brushes an 1 p'ers. ant words, magnifying little virtues into big ones The pulpit, the press and the gravestone are the great saint making triumvirate.
