Dean Clarke's Lecture.

Dean Clarke, the noted lecturer, addressed a good sized audience at the court house last Saturday evening. Mr. Clarke is a good speaker and held his audience in easy touch for about forty minutes. His subject was "Romanism against Americanism." Many of his auditors were measurably disappointed. They expected he would bitterly arraign Catholicism, and pour out vials of wrath upon popery; that he would inveigh against Catholics in most scathing invectives. In this they were agreeably disappointed. His treatment was more mild and conservative. He admitted that thousands of Catholics are noble men and women, in all ordinary affairs of life, but he argued, their religious teaching has been such that they regard their higher allegiance is to their spiritual head, the pope of Rome. Such views, however, are not alone peculiar to Catholics. There are many of all the protestant denominations, who hold that their allegiance to the "higher law" is paramount to all secular laws. The cause for the greatest apprehension of evil from Catholics in case of conflict with the state is, he said, they are a unit, while the protestants are so divided that they would be unable to accomplish any scheme for state control if either of them should attempt it. The speaker's argument went to show that that the head of the Catholic church, the pope, is now endeavoring to get control of temporal power in this country, and that the protestant element of the nation should checkmate any such movement. To substantiate claims, he read extracts from eminent Catholics, high in authority, showing, if true, that the Catholic hierarchy is trying to get control of this government. The following are samples of extracts read:
Says the Cincinnati Catholic Telegraph: "It will be a glorious day for the Catholics in this country when, under the blows of justice and morality, our school system will be shivered to pieces."
"The time is not far away when the Roman Catholics, at the order of the pope, will refuse to pay their school tax and will send bullets to the breast of the government agents, rather than pay it."
—Monsieur Capel.
"Catholicity will one day rule America, and then religious liberty is at an end."
—Bishop of St. Louis.
The speaker asserted that the A. P. A. is not a political party to be used as a tail to the republican kite. It has a head, heart and soul, and has no use for a caudal appendage.
His lecture as a whole was couched in respectful language to intelligent men and women and could not be considered offensive in style, but it will doubtless be discredited by Catholics who will deny that any such language was used by the authorities quoted.

At the close of his lecture quite a number of copies of poems were sold at two for a nickel. The larger portion of his speech was of a narrative and didactic character drawn from history, to which no patriotic person could reasonably take exception. His quotations, however, from Catholics high in authority and his inferences therefrom will no doubt be firmly denounced by Catholics.

A Tramp in the Hay flow.

A few days ago a tramp was reported in P. M.'s hay mow. P. M. made an inspection and was satisfied one of the Coxeyites was enjoying a slumber after a hard day's tramp. So he hurried off after the marshal to have the tramp arrested and taken before his honor the recorder. After diligent search the night watch was found and P. M. and C. W. went to take the slumbering tramp before the proper official.

They cautiously climbed up into the barn loft where his trampish lay snoring under a pile of hay for a covering. Now they had him sure. There was no avenue of escape. The night watch, in a stentorian voice that would have waked the dead, cried out:
"What are you doing here, you son of a seacock? Get out of here!"
He paused for a reply, but not a word was heard nor a muscle moved.

"I say," roared the night watch, "Get up! you son of a tinker, — quick, or I'll stick this pitchfork into you."

But Mr. Tramp was as motionless as clay and as dumb as an oyster.

Things were getting serious and a thought that the tramp was dead flitted through his head, and P. M.'s hair began to stand on end.

After a consultation it was decided to make a closer inspection. That was proceeded with, a sort of post mortem examination, as it were, when, lo and behold when Mr. Tramp's hat was removed a sack of straw was brought to view, and a vision of a deep laid scheme by some joker, to have a little fun at their expense began to appear.

For the particulars of this o'er true tale, inquire of Roseburg's punsters, M. C. R. and B. B., who after adjusting the "paddy," were watching developments at a safe distance from the absorbing scene, their sides nearly bursting with suppressed laughter.
