The readers of the PJAINDEALER will emember that in giving a sketch of our travels in 1847 we left them on the anks of the Sacramento river at the iouse of an American family, the first we had come to since leaving the Williamette valley. Around this house lying in the shade, and strolling about, were fifteen or twenty Indians, all as naked as they were the day they were born. The women of the family residing there, moved about apparently unconscious of the nakedness of the Inlians. They were so accustomed to them that their presence was a matter of utter unconcern, but to us of our company F. W.
