RESIDENT.

Pine Grove Meeting.

The Pine Grove campmeeting, which has been held for 12 consecutive days, closed with Sunday night's meeting. These meetings have been under the control of the United Brethren, Rev. E. P. Williams the chief orator. Mr. Williams is a rapid and forcible speaker. At the time we were present, he was vigorously inveighing against secret orders, principally the Masons, giving, as he claimed, their passwords. So, if true, his hearers will have a chance now to get into a lodge and see with their own eyes the horrible rites of that fraternity.
The speaker did not say in plain words that men were stripped naked for initiation, but that was the inference of his remarks; for, he said, a woman cannot become a Mason because no husband, father or brother would be willing to have a wife, daughter or sister stripped naked to receive the indecent rights of admission to the order. He said the Church (the U. B. Church, of course,) had all the elements of reform necessary to make men and women better, but secret orders were impediments to reformation.
The attendance at these meetings, we are informed, has been quite large and considerable interest manifested. The preacher called on the congregation for $10 and passed the hat. Result, $9.95.

Declared Insane.

Mrs. Annie Richards wife of N. Richards, was examined before Judge Stearns Saturday, on petition of W. S. Johnson for insanity. Dr. E. D. G. was the examining physician. Mrs. Richards' insanity was of a violent form. Her age is 28 years. She was taken to Salem Sunday night by D. Shambrook, deputy sheriff.

H. H. Giltry, reading clerk of the United States senate, was in Roseburg this morning. In the short conversation had with him, he said it would be unfortunate for Oregon should the republicans fail to stand by Herrmann in our next political campaign.

REMINISCENT.

The reader will remember we started from the mission field in a Spanish cart for the Redwoods. After about 25 miles travel in the hot sun, we reached the house of a Spaniard located on a small stream coming down from the coast range of mountains. Here we concluded to remain for the night as the proprietor of the premises kindly invited us to stop at his ranch, and doing so he provided our larder with some edibles that were a luxury to us, such as green corn, tomatoes and beans, vegetables that we had not partaken of for months previous to that day. We found one patch of pumpkins on this ranch planted and growing in a rather peculiar manner. Holes had been dug about one foot in depth and 18 inches in diameter at the surface of the ground, the seed then planted in these holes, which were germinating. The vines reached the surface and grew most luxuriously. They were thus planted to receive more moisture from the earth, as the surface of the soil was very dry. We had seen many watermelon patches planted in the same way, and we have never known watermelons to taste so deliciously as they did at that time.

That evening before retiring for our night's sleep, we looked around the edge of the redwood timber for a place upon which to camp and pitch our tents preparatory to the labor that we were about to engage in. We found a convenient locality, felled a tree, returned to our camping place and was soon in the arms of Morpheus dreaming of golden treasures.

We were up early the next morning, made a hasty breakfast and started for the camping place selected the evening before. As we were starting the proprietor of the ranch came riding up, accosted us in a friendly manner and assured us that anything in the way of edibles he could furnish us we should have at the lowest possible price. We informed him that we would want a beef steer, and would like to have it delivered at our camp the next day. He assured us it would be there early the next morning. We now hastened on to the camping place selected and on our arrival immediately proceeded to erect a couple of shanties in which to lodge of nights, and put in such of our worldly goods as we did not want to be exposed to the sun rays, for we apprehended no discomfort from the weebot rains in that region, in fact during our 22 month's stay in California there was but one rain fall and that was in the night time. For our shanties we split some rails, made us a pen about 7 feet high entirely open at one side for egress and ingress, covered the top with boughs of the redwood, rigged up some scaffolding in the corners to spread our blankets, made a fire, prepared and ate our supper, and then the labors of the day being ended, we sought our downy couches, and soon was enjoying nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep.

We were up early the next morning, kindled a fire, prepared our breakfast and having partaken of the morning meal, we began to look about us for a suitable spot upon which to erect our saw mill, which saw mill was to consist of a pit along the bank of the gulch near by where to put in some sort of a frame on which to roll the logs preparatory to making them into lumber with a whip-saw propelled by man power and elbow grease. But before doing much execution in that line we heard from the adjacent prairie loud carrahaing from lusty half breed voices, and there hove in sight two dark skinned buckaros having a large beef steer in charge, one in a manner leading it along by a rope around its horns and the other one behind doing his utmost to head it in the direction of our camp. The steer was brought up, we suspended work for the time being, signified to the half breeds that we wanted them to butcher it, whereupon the one who had been driving the steer along, unloosed his lasso from the pommel of his saddle, gave it a whirl in the air, and threw it, catching the steer by one of his hind legs. They then stretched the steer out, wound their ropes around it, making it impossible for him to get up, and then one of them rode up close to the steer, drew his machete and with one stroke lay the animal in the agencies of death. The animal was soon dressed, its skin hanged on the limb of a tree, and we proceeded to strip all the fleshy part from the bones, cut it up into narrow strips, and this being done, we hung it up on lasso ropes stretched out for the purpose in the sun to dry. The air was so pure that meat so hung up in the sun preserves its sweetness all summer. This was the manner in which the Spaniards preserved all their meat. They never thought of such a thing as salting it down. The man from whom we had purchased the beef now came along, and demanding of him the price of the beef—weighing about 800 pounds—eight dollars he replied, but making a reservation of the hide. That was good Spanish beef, better than Californians get nowadays.

The many friends of the family of Hon. A. C. Jones who formerly resided in Jacksonville will be pained to learn that his only son, Homer, met with an accident at Hailey, Idaho, recently, by which he lost his eyesight. The young man is a practicing dentist and it was a chemical explosion that resulted ultimately in the destruction of his eyesight.—Tidings.

The Finishing Touch.
In putting the finishing touch to your toilet do you always see that your shoes are in keeping with the rest of your makeup? The shoes may be better than the other garments and still be appropriate, but if they are not up to the raiment in style and quality the effect is unpleasant.
Mrs. Grace Osburn's fine line of Shoes stand on their merits, is infinite in variety, excellent in quality, and moderate in price.
