Wonderful Preservation Through Nineteen Years' Interment-Spectators Moved to Tears -Impressive Ceremonies at the Church of the Invalides. The grave in the valley of Napoleon, on St. Helena, as the place had come to be called, was surrounded by an iron railing set in a heavy stone curb. Over the grave was a covering of 6 inch stone which admitted to a vault 11 feet deep, 8 feet long and 4 feet 8 inches broad and was apparently filled with earth, but digging down some seven feet a layer of at 25 cents per hundred, Roman coment was found. This broken laid bare a layer of rough hewn stone 10 inches thick and fastened together by fron clamps. It took 4 % hours to remove this layer. The stone up, the slab forming the lid of the interior sarcophagus was exposed, inclosed in a border of Roman cement strongly attached to the walls of the vault. So stoutly had all these various coverings been sealed with cement and bound by iron bands that it took the large party of workers ten hours to reach the coffin "The outermost coffin was slightly injured," says an eyewitness. "Then came one of lead, which was in good condition and inclosed two others-one of tin and one of wood. The last coffin was lined inside with white satin, which, having become detached by the effect of time, had fallen upon the body and enveloped it like a winding sheet and had become slightly attached to it.

'It is difficult to describe with what anxiety and emotion those who were present waited for the moment which was to expose to them all that was left of the Emperor Napoleon. Notwithstanding the singular state of preservation of the tomb and coffins, we could scarcely hope to find anything but some misshapen remains of the least perishable part of the costume to evidence the Guillard raised the sheet of satin, an indescribable feeling of surprise and affection was expressed by the spectators, many of whom burst into tears. The emperor himself was before their eyes. The features of the face, though changed, were perfectly recognized; the hands extremely beautiful; his well known costume had suffered but little, and the colors were easily distinguished. The attitude itself was full of ease, and but for quarters if you want first-class dental the fragments of satin lining which cov- work. ered, as with fine gauze, several parts of the uniform, we might have believed we still saw Napoleon lying on his bed of state."
