A Trip to Myrtle Creek.

No. 2.

After taking a general survey of this cozy little village on the creek whose name it bears, we began interviewing the men to learn the nature and extent of their business and prospects.

Of course the postoffice of a town is the point from which radiates all the information needed for a newspaper man to begin his inquiries.

Geo. W. Wannacott is the postmaster here, a genial gentleman; and besides wrestling with the mail pouches and distributing mail to the citizens, he furnishes them with groceries, stationery, patent medicine, tobacco, cigars, hardware, etc.

Geo. Weaver, recently deceased, erected last summer the largest store-building in the town and had it well stocked with goods of general merchandise, and was doing a good business. The gentlemanly manager, John Metz, stated that he understands the widow will continue the business.

Hezekiah Dyer, at the old stand of F. M. Gabbert, is also engaged in general merchandising. He carries quite an extensive stock of goods and keeps up with the times—good democratic times—and is hopeful of the future. He evidently has an eye on the next change of administration as an earnest of better times.

A. Fenton & Son are just completing a fine furniture store. They will also do undertaking work. They will remove soon from their old stand to the new, where they will have more room.

K. M. Duncan keeps a drug store near the post office. He has a neat little store and carries nearly all articles usually kept by a druggist, such as paints, oils, chemicals and cigars. He is doing a good business.

J. L. Bounds, tonsorial artist, has parlors on Main street, where he shaves and cuts hair for all who favor him with their patronage. Bounds is bound to prosper.

John Frank, a live Dutchman, opposite Bounds' and lower down the street, also plies the tonsorial art, and will give you a clean shave or trim your locks for a reasonable compensation.

Wm. Powell, a son of Vulcan, has a smithy on Main street, where he makes and mends farm implements, shoes horses and does a general blacksmithing business. One of the most useful tradesmen in a town is the village blacksmith.

Chas. Kelley, jeweler, on Main street, is affable and obliging, and will repair old jewelry, watches, clocks, or sell new ones. Time keepers are needful, and Kelley keeps them.

W. B. Drake has a smithy on Main street, near the postoffice, where he carries on a general blacksmithing business for the surrounding country. He will do you a good job and on reasonable terms, as a long residence in the village attests, and the extent and completeness of his shop shows.

The public institutions of the village are, three churches, a Presbyterian, a South Methodist and Christian—ample accommodations for all worshippers; two hotels, a flouring mill, and last but not least, a school house where the youths are taught the rights, privileges and duties of citizenship obligations that attach to the elective franchise as well as a knowledge of those branches of learning which enlarge and strengthen the understanding. Take the inchoate citizen through the public school curriculum, sufficiently trained to get a fair knowledge of what there is taught, and he may be turned loose on the community without fear of him becoming a bad citizen.

The Myrtle hotel, owned by Mr. George Dement, is a good and commodious house, a veritable traveler's home, with comfortable beds, a good table and plenty of it, well prepared in the cooking department. This house is popular with the traveling public.

The Overland, owned by Mr. George Stephenson, is also a popular inn where the weary traveler finds a home. The host and hostess are affable and courteous and spare no pains to make their guests comfortable. Good beds, good fare, well-cooked and served, make this house one of the indispensables of a thriving town such as Myrtle Creek has become.

Willis Kramer & Co., have here an excellent roller mill. Its manufacture is very popular and finds a ready market all along the line of the railroad. It is one of the best mills in the county.

There are many fine residences in this village which indicate that the people are measurably contented and happy.

Long live Myrtle Creek.

Recorder J. B. Cawfield of Roseburg Lodge, No. 16, A. O. U. W., received this morning from the Grand Recorder a draft for $2,000 payable to Mrs. Katie B. Bunnell, widow and assignee of Dr. N. P. Bunnell, who died October 11th. Thus, in less than a month, the A. O. U.
