

WRECK OF THE BANDORILLE.

The Steamer Stranded on the Umpqua Bar—Capt. Winant Drowned.

The steamer Bandorille, owned by Edward H. Habighorst, of Portland, became disabled while crossing over the Umpqua river bar Thursday morning, and, drifting into the breakers, stranded on the bar. Her commander, J. J. Winant, was caught by a sea, swept overboard and drowned. No other lives were lost, the crew, nine in number, and one passenger, being rescued by the life-saving crew.

The Bandorille left Portland a month ago for San Francisco and way ports, heavily loaded and was due to arrive back about December 10. From her wrecked at Umpqua, it is evident Captain Winant had been offered considerable way freight, and was steaming back and forth between Yaquina, Umpqua and Coos bay. The steamer passed in over the Umpqua bar on Tuesday and tied up at Gardiner, a town seven miles above the mouth of the river, the same day. Wednesday afternoon Captain Winant started for sea, but, finding the bar breaking heavily, abandoned the attempt and returned to the dock at Gardiner.

Thursday morning, the weather having moderated somewhat, another attempt was to put the Bandorille over the bar, although a tremendous sea was running.

No bar pilot on the Pacific coast was better fitted for the undertaking than Captain Winant, and he had perfect confidence in the stanchness of his vessel, for twice he had struck on the bars of the northwest coast with the Bandorille and got over without the steamer showing a sign of strain or making a drop of water. One instance was 18 months ago when he took the Bandorille into the Siuslaw during a southwest gale. Right in the middle of the bar was the steamer raised on the crest of a mountainous sea and dropping into the trough struck on the "hog back" with a force that shattered the glass in the cabin windows. The next incoming sea lifted her forward and dropped her again on the bottom. This was repeated three times, when the lead showed the ship to be in deep water. As Captain Winant expressed it, in relating the incident: "We just walked over the Siuslaw bar."

With this confidence in his ship and his own ability Captain Winant Thursday morning headed the Bandorille into the tumbling seas of the Umpqua bar. One towering wave after another the steamer rode in safety and the crew were congratulating themselves that a few moments more would carry them into the safety of the open ocean, when suddenly the wheel was wrenched from the hands of the quartermaster steering, and before the man could recover the spokes had spun hard over to port allowing the steamer to fall off into the trough of the sea.

The starboard rudder chain had parted leaving the Bandorille helplessly rolling in the awful muck of a breaking bar. Sea after sea broke over the doomed steamer as she drifted toward the line of breakers on the south shore, but Captain Winant held to his post on the bridge and it was this devotion to duty that cost him his life. Taking every advantage of the steamer's drift he kept the engines going ahead or astern in a vain effort to get into deep water.

After a half hour of terrible pounding from the seas, during which Captain Winant was submerged time and again, the Bandorille struck the beach a half mile south of the entrance to the river. Numb with cold and exhausted from his efforts in clinging to the bridge, Captain Winant descended to the deck to look after the safety of his crew and passengers. The breakers were piling over the steamer in great masses of water, and he ordered all hands to the lee side of the cabin, where at least they would be safe from being washed overboard. Captain Winant then attempted to make his way forward that he might see what progress the life-saving crew who, knew by this time, had started to the rescue, were making.

Reaching the bend of the pilot-house, the gallant seaman was forced to let go his hold of the lee bulwarks and leap across the gangway, to grasp the rail fastened to the cabin. In attempting this he slipped on the careened and sea-washed deck. Towering over the ship was a foaming crest of mountain water in an instant to pour its fearful force on the wreck. That instant was too short for Captain Winant to recover himself, and in the surging flood of that breaking sea he was carried overboard.

Rescue was impossible. The lifeboat was a mile to leeward, coming, it is true, but before the heroic crew could reach the wreck the captain of the Bandorille was making his peace with the pilot above.

In the terrific sea running, the result of the gale that has prevailed on the coast during the past week, it was found impossible for the life-saving crew to reach the Bandorille. An attempt was then made to fire a life line over the steamer from the shore, and, after two hours' hard work this was accomplished, and crew and crew being brought safely ashore in the "breches boy."

The steamer will prove a total loss, the last wire from Empire City, 21 miles from the scene of the wreck, stating that the vessel was fast going to pieces under the pounding sea was receiving, the cabin having been torn adrift, and the bulwarks carried away.

Captain J. J. Winant was one of the best known and most popular skippers on the Pacific coast. For years he was in the employ of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, leaving that employ to take command of the Bandorille some three years ago. He was 51 years of age and resided at Yaquina, where he leaves a family of grown children, his wife being dead. He was a man of exemplary habits, and, as Mr. Habighorst states, "Ever faithful to his employers."

The Bandorille was built at Yaquina in 1889 for the Deep Sea Fishing Company, but was later brought to Portland, lengthened, and placed in the coasting trade. She was 110 feet long and had a carrying capacity of 400 tons. Her value was about $20,000 fully insured.

They are Protectionists.

In 1892 thousands of republicans, giving heed to democratic persuasion, helped to put the democratic party in power. They had been made to believe that good times would be made better. The necessities of life were to be cheaper, because they were to be produced by the cheaper labor of foreign lands. Wages were to be higher and employment steadier. The thousands who took this bait did not stop to consider the inconsistency of the argument.

In 1894 these thousands of republicans swung back into line, and, with the assistance of thousands of democrats, helped to elect a republican house as the result of a terrible drubbing of the party of free trade. The recent elections demonstrate beyond question that these democratic voters have not yet gluttoned their vengeance. They are lined up on the same side for the next fight.

The fact is, and the democratic politicians may as well realize it, that to a very large extent these voters are no longer democrats. They are protectionists, who will stand by the party of protection as long as the tariff remains an issue, and they will take pleasure in polling their votes so as to do the democratic party the greatest possible harm.

To all intents these former democrats have become part of the effective army of republicanism. They are cordially welcomed, and nothing is left undone to make them feel at home.—Wheeler Intelligence.

The recently published report of the finance commissioners of the Paris Exposition estimates the cost of preparation at $20,000,000, and it is believed before the end is reached the big expenditures of Chicago will be surpassed, and the closing fete of the century will be altogether the most magnificent ever seen.
