

McKINLEY'S VIEWS.

In reply to John P. Eberhard, the spokesman for a delegation from Knoxville, Tenn., Wm. McKinley said: "Mr. Eberhard and My Fellow Citizens: I am glad indeed to meet and greet the Knoxville McKinley and Hobart club in this city and at my home; and I thank you most cordially for traveling so long a distance to express your personal good-will to me and your devotion to the principles of the republican party. "You are right, Mr. Spokesman, in saying that the republican party stands now as it has always stood, for a sound and stable currency and for the maintenance of all its money of every kind at parity and always equal to the best money of the most civilized nations of the earth. (Applause.) A depreciated currency, as you have so well said, would work disaster to the interests of the people, and to none more than to those of the workingmen and producers. Long years ago, Daniel Webster, said they were the first to feel it, and the last to recover from it. "A depreciated currency," said he, "is fatal to industry, frugality and economy. It fosters the spirit of speculation and extravagance. It is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's field with the sweat of the poor man's brow. "That which we call money, my fellow-citizens, and with which values are measured and settlements made must be as true as the bushel which measures the grain of the farmer and as honest as the hours of labor which the man who toils is required to give. (Applause.) The one must be full and complete and as honest as the other. (Applause.) Our currency today is good—all of it as good as gold—and it is the unflinching determination of the republican party to keep and maintain it forever. It is the duty of the people of this country to stand unitedly against every effort to degrade our currency or debase our credit. (Cries of "They will.") They must unite as they have united in the past in every great crisis of our country's history. When the country seemed wildly bent on wild inflation, preceding the resumption of specie payments, the sober sense of the American people, without regard to party, united and stemmed that threatened tide of irredeemable paper money and repudiation and placed and kept the nation on the rock of public honor. "You have rightly stated, sir, that the republican party not only believes in sound money and the highest public faith and honor on the part of the government of the United States to all its creditors, but also that it believes in a tariff which, while raising enough money to conduct the government economically administered, will leave highest and best interests of American labor, American agriculture, American commerce and American citizenship. (Cheers.) Some of our political opponents are given to saying that the tariff question is settled. If we are not wrong in interpreting their meaning, we think they are right, and thank them for the confession. (Applause.) We believe the tariff question is settled—settled in the minds and hearts of the American people, and settled on the side of protection. (Tremendous applause.) But, however, firmly it may be settled in the public mind, it is not yet settled in public law. What is in the hearts and consciences of the people touching any public question is not effectual until it is written in the public statutes, and this can only be done through the exercise of the elective franchise in the choice of the congress of the United States, which names our public laws. No one, I take it, will regard the present tariff law as a last and final settlement of the question. Whatever may be our differences about economic principles upon which tariff legislation should be made, all agree that the present tariff law is a failure, even as a revenue measure. "So, without discussing the principle of free trade or protection, everybody must appreciate that no law is a settlement which creates every month a deficiency in the public treasury. (Cheers.) The people of this country are not satisfied with such an enactment, and will not be satisfied until a public law shall express the public will in a statute which will provide adequate revenues for the needs of the government, full security for its credit and ample protection for the labor, capital and energy of the American people. (Applause.) "I thank you, my fellow-citizens, for this friendly call, and I assure you it will give me great pleasure to meet each and everyone of you personally." (Tremendous applause and cheers.) After the speeches, there was singing by a glee club and music by the bands.

THE IRISH FLAG.

Judge Stone decided the Lawrence, Mass., "Irish Flag" case in the police court on the 20th. On the eve of July 4, Patrick O'Brien, a contractor, placed a green flag on the chimney of the unfinished Ward 9 school building. The next day City Marshal Bailey removed the flag, subsequently restoring it to O'Brien on demand. O'Brien replaced it on the building, where it has since remained. Marshal Bailey secured a warrant against O'Brien, alleging violation of Chapter 115, Acts of 1895, which makes unlawful the placing of a flag or emblem of a foreign country upon the outside of public buildings. O'Brien's counsel raised the point that the green flag was not an emblem of any foreign country, because Ireland was not an independent sovereignty. At the hearing on July 7, the judge took this point into consideration. O'Brien was adjudged guilty, and a fine of $10 imposed. O'Brien took an appeal to the Superior court, Portland.

upon the shelf of salesmen have no national significance, but when they are combined as they are in the American flag, they are pregnant with meaning, and no emblems symbolizing sentiments adverse to the stars and stripes should be tolerated in the United States. The flags of other countries should be honored and respected by the citizens of the United States when displayed on their own soil, at consulate or foreign vessels while in our ports, but no where else.

A Trip Up Deer Creek.

Thursday and Friday of this week we visited the country on South Deer creek. This section has many very fine farms. The farmers are now in the midst of harvest. The acreage is quite extensive, but in consequence of the unprecedented dry and hot weather the crops are lighter than usual. The early sown grain is good both as to quantity and quality. The yield will be about 15 bushels to the acre. On the uplands the straw is very short and the grain somewhat shrunk. The corn crop is very limited in acreage but the color is good up to date—it does not appear to be burnt. Vegetables are suffering immensely for rain, and are now beyond redemption for a full crop. The farmers, however, will have enough for home consumption, but not much, if any surplus. There are a few favored localities on low bottom land where the corn and vegetables are doing fairly well and may yet make a fair yield. The hay crop too is short in this locality but of good quality. Much that was intended for a grain crop has been cut for hay. Threshing will commence in about one week from now, say about August 10th, when we will learn more about the yield per acre of the grain crop. Notwithstanding the depression in finance and the shortness of the crops the people are still quite hopeful for the future. They are still cheerful, friendly, hospitable and neighborly. So deeply inborn in their souls is their patriotism and love for American institutions, American ideas, that these depressing democratic times has not been able to eradicate from their minds the thought that the future has in store for them better times. Their faith in the future of Douglas county is as strong and abiding as her everlasting hills and fertile valleys.

It is not likely that the Eugene cannery will make a run fruit this year, says the Guard. The berry season is about over, and owing to the scarcity of nearly all kinds of fruit, it will not pay to start the cannery. Last year, a large quantity of tomatoes were canned, and, as the company still has about 2000 cans of that vegetable on hand, it will not put up any this fall. However the drying department may make a short run on prunes.
Reports from Sherman county are to the effect that wheat is suffering from the continued hot weather, and farmers do not expect the average yield of the county will be more than 12½ bushels to the acre. A month ago they expected the average yield would be 25 bushels.
