ONE THING AT A TIME.

The president's first message to congress is printed in full in another colump. It deals with but one question, and that is the deficiency of the revenues. Other questions are ignored entirely. Even the one all absorbing topic of the campaign, the question of the currency, is not even referred to. This is as it should be. The people voted that the present financial system should be maintained. If a change were decreed then it were well that it should be immediately considered and the suspense speedily removed. Fortunately for the country, it was not, and the thing of most pressing concern, the treasury deficit, re-
