It was an er, and a great deal more effective, to the precious dust, stead of making assertions which cannot be borne out by the facts in the case. For instance, the Review asserts that "All business men who haven't a pull with the city officials are compelled to pay à license tax." In making this statement the editor of the Review would have lead those who are not familiar the facts to believe that there were a a certain few who should pay a tax but nance is not enforced against them. Such assertions as this on the part of the Review are all rot, there is not a vestige of truth in it, and the editor well knows there is not. Then why should he indulge in such idle and silly assertions? I venture to say that if this editor will look up the records he will find that there has been a larger per cent of the city licenses paid up in the last year and a half than there has ever been before during the past fifteen years, and I also assert that there has been no favoriteism city Saturday.
