SOFT TARIFF EPIPHANIS.

Called by the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, From the House Debates.
Parker of New Jersey—Protection and prosperity march hand in hand, and revenue follows after.
Gibson of Tennessee—No government can live without money, as no human body can live without blood. The prosperity of the railroads is a pretty good index to the prosperity of the whole country.
McClure of Arkansas—I believe it was an Irishman who said that if Mr. Cleveland's second term had come first he never would have had a second.
Adams of Pennsylvania—The trade of South America belongs to us by natural conditions; they produce what we want, and we manufacture for their necessities.
Hopkins of Illinois—Our experience in this house during the last few days has verified the old statement that a genuine Bourbon democrat never forgets an error and rarely learns a new fact.
Dyer of Maine—The late administration has had its trials, but amid them all one persistent error has vitiated all its calculations, and that is that a dollar borrowed is the fiscal equivalent to a dollar collected.
Bartholomew of Missouri—When a business man or good pater familias finds that his debt exceeds his credit every week he will, if he be a well-meaning and conscientious man, either curtail his expenses or increase his revenue.
Dyer of Maine—Mr. Chairman, the past four years have been enlightening, especially to candid investigators of economic problems. We have been attending a kindergarten on a gigantic scale, the tuition has come high, but no people ever learned so much in so brief a time.
Grosvenor of Ohio—If a political organization leaves the path of rectitude and elms of law politics and bad government, that political organization will be punished as inevitably as God punishes the punishment of the man who abuses his physical system.
Mahoney of New York—The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Leavelle) has advised that he "was once a gold fool, and that he is now a silver crank." If there is any intelligence possible from such a miscegenation of ideas, the gentlemen from Ohio is welcome to claim it.
Griswold of Pennsylvania—Changes to the consumer in articles of consumption, if made by reducing the wages of the laborer who produces them to the rate paid his competitors in other lands, where penny sits at the bedside and sorrowing wife surrounds the deathbed, is a deplorable object.
Russell of Connecticut—I doubt the philosophy or the common sense of the political economists in this time of American civilization and United States courts of living who figures with apparent earnestness, even with the devious mathematical calculations of theoretical cookery, that 10 cents a day is an adequate and proper expenditure for an individual's diet.
Barney of Wisconsin—Mr. Speaker, not only has the business of this country been destroyed and laboring men trod out of employment everywhere, but, in addition to this, there is no price for anything which either the manufacturer or the farmer has to sell; and this is because the American manufacturer and the American farmer have lost the best market on this earth—the American home market.
Sauerbrey of Wisconsin—We stand for a policy which is American in its highest and best sense; a policy which stands for the independence of the United States from all the rest of the world, which stands for the development of all the natural resources of the country, which stands for the founding of cities, the building of railroads, for the extension of telegraph lines, for the digging of canals, for the growth of internal commerce, for the employment of our own people in our own country.

FIGHTING MISSISSIPPI FLOODS.

Saving the Shores as Necessary as Taking Care of the River.
With the fact that the flood of 1897 was one of the highest, if not absolutely the highest, ever known will be recorded the other fact that, especially in Louisiana, the content with the waters was the most gallant, united and, up to a certain point, successful ever noted. The same may be said of the efforts everywhere to succor the sufferers by the flood.
The Louisiana levees have undoubtedly been greatly relieved by pressure by the breaking of the Mississippi levees. The misfortune of one section is the good fortune of another. But should not this circumstance suggest a revival of the discussion of the outlet system, the opening of channels whereby the surcharged Mississippi may empty its surplus waters into the gulf, reducing the force of the swollen river without endangering the country? While the levees must remain the chief reliance, is not another outlet from the opening of ancient channels, through which the river formerly found its way, and if need be the construction of new ones worth a trial?
The railroads have been considerable sufferers by the present flood, and its subsidence will probably be the signal for the raising of their tracks and changes of grade throughout the submerged region. The railroads can less afford the havoc of the flood than the planters.
The duty of the federal and state governments in relieving the calamities of the present flood and in protecting the people from future ravages seems clear. The necessity of taking care of the river is not more urgent than that of saving the shores. As soon as practicable the work should begin of protecting and reclaiming the enormous and fertile lower valley of the Mississippi. In this undertaking the federal and state governments, local governments and the capital and labor of the region interested should join, as never before, to accomplish the end by means which have hitherto been unempleado.—Kansas City Star.

I have noticed of late that there has been published in the Eugene Guard a continual out-pour of fault-finding against the president and management of the state university, and statements concerning the president of the university's private affairs. When any one attacks another's private affairs, endeavoring to make capital out of them, he is simply driving tactics in his own coffin, and placing a crown upon his enemy's head. Such publication will not ameliorate the interest of the university. Why do the citizens of Eugene permit these publications without any apparent resentment? It gives the impression abroad that they are lacking in public spirit and progression, that they are unappreciative of the location of the state university in their town. It is detrimental to Eugene's business interests.

Lumigation will be held by a town engaged in such turmoil and strife, as would be inferred from publication in the Guard. Who knows that they will not be the next victim to severe criticism? Silence means consent, and if the citizens of Eugene permit a sword to be placed in the hands of their enemies, they need not ask their senators and representatives to surrender every other measure to protect the interest of the university, when they will allow persons to matters to down their business interests and public enterprises. Newspapers throughout the state are commenting and publishing clippings from the Guard. Yet Eugene's best citizens are indifferent. Will they be in the majority at the meeting of the next legislature?—COURTNEY OBSERVER in the Oregonian.

Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

Oregon State C. E. Convention.

Will convene at Eugene, Or., May 13th to 16th. Elaborate and extensive preparations have been made by the local societies at Eugene to care for this great gathering in the best possible manner. The program is out and includes many topics of great interest to the Endeavor cause. Many prominent pastors, evangelists and other workers will be present, besides two gentlemen from San Francisco, one of whom, Mr. Kolla V. Watt, is the great head of the committee of arrangements for the "International Convention," which meets in that city in July. Many of Oregon's Endeavorers will remain at home from the state convention in order that they may attend this great world's convention, however, there will be a large attendance at Eugene. This organization has grown so rapidly in Oregon during recent years that it is a serious question now to select a place of meeting where it can be properly cared for. Entertainment will be provided by the Eugene Endeavorer, and reduced rates have been given by all lines of roads.

How to Treat a Wife.

(From Pacific Health Journal.)
First, get a wife; second, be patient. You may have trials and perplexities in your business, but do not therefore, carry to your home a cloudy or contracted brow. Your wife may have trials, which, though of less magnitude, may be hard for her to bear. A kind word, a tender look, will do wonders in chasing from her brow all clouds of gloom.—To this we would add always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house. It is the best and is sure to be needed sooner or later. You wife will then know that you really care for her and wish to protect her health. For sale by A. C. Marsters & Co.

Notwithstanding the increasing recognition of Oregon hops as the best grown in the world, it seems this state has been more consistent than any other in carrying out the plan of avoiding over-production by curtailing of area. Washington shows a positive increase in hop acreage over the area finally harvested last year, certain sections indicating a complete doubling. In Wisconsin, where disaster had induced abandonment of the industry, counties that formerly produced are setting out new vines. In New York the recovery of prices lately caused yards to be well cared for during the winter, and, while there will be no marked increase in the aggregate, owing to abandonment already determined on, some places report increased interest in the industry. New York generally the crop starts in with a full acreage. This is apt to be the way with schemes for controlling crop supplies. Those who are really most deserving of the artificial aid thus invoked to be invoked will become the victims of others' overreaching. The best thing for the Oregon hopgrower to do is, instead of trying to co-operate in raising general prices by stopping production, to put increasing thought and care upon the improvement of his product in quality and salable appearance. There seems to be a chance to demonstrate in this way the superiority of Oregon hops and force higher prices for them by virtue of their greater value.—Oregonian.

Travelers shudder with horror at the thought of the train-wrecker who stealthily undermines the supports of a railway bridge and precipitates a passenger train with its load of precious human freight to a horrible death by fire and water. There is a deadlier enemy than the train-wrecker that menaces not only travelers but stay-at-home. Its name is indigestion. It slowly undermines the supports that hold up the bridge of life and yearly precipitates untold thousands into the dread valley of consumption. If people will only take the right precaution they can avoid this calamity and even remedy it after it has occurred if they will act in time.
