Competition never worries us, because we "buy right" hence "sell right." The facts are these; every move in our business is only made after the most careful consideration, nothing left to chance. Shoes have advanced in price but not with us. We sell you a good oil grain shoe for $1.25 and upwards, fine shoes in proportion. If you doubt us, come and see us, convince yourself that we have what we advertise. We don't care to do all the business in town, but want to get a share of it. We firmly believe that a concern that gives its customers exceptionally good values in every instance is bound to go ahead year by year. This idea prevails throughout our entire business. Every dollars worth of goods must give the wearer satisfaction, even the all wool absolutely fast color $8.00 suits.

A SUMMER TRIP.

Down the Coquille, via Marshfield, to the Sea.

"In the days when we went gypsying, we bid dull care begone," and packing our lunch basket (otherwise a two-horse wagon) set out for "greener fields and pastures new." All along the well remembered road we spied new beauties in field and stream, forest and glade. Anon the "rock ribbed hills" took the form of an ancient castle with battlemented towers, and gothic doors and windows festooned with ivy and moss and we almost imagined that we saw the phantom shape of a knight in armor, leaning motionless upon his spear while he gazed away into the distance. Now a group of cone shaped rocks reminded us of a cluster of pottery furnace, and then a single, sharp needle like spire would stand out alone, grim and defiant like the finger of fate, while winding in and out through all was the musical murmur of cascades, mingled with the deeper roar of the higher falls, like the faint notes of some far away organ played by a master's hand. On either side loomed giant trees, so tall that we lamed our necks in trying to see their tops, while we thought of the wonderful stories locked within the sturdy hearts of these giants of the forest, of the time when the unbroken wood echoed only the steps of the wild man or the scream of the wild beast, before the all conquering white man had driven them from their homes, and the startled echoes repeated the blows of the ax, the pulling of steamboats and the shriek of the locomotive whistle. But the white man now pervades forest and stream, the wild man has almost disappeared from the earth, and the wild beast withdrawn into deeper solitudes, and locked within a mantle of impenetrable silence, the mighty trees guard the secrets of the past, nor will they ever reveal to any coming generation aught that they may see or hear in the future.

The first stage of our journey ended at the Half Way House in Brewster valley, where we received the hospitality of the proprietor and wife.

The second evening we reached Gravel Ford, and inspected a small creamery situated there. The operations for the day were over, but we looked into the vats, watched the sacking of the day's out put of cheese and then went out to see the whey fed to a drove of hogs, and while watching them we were irresistably reminded of the great struggle of the human family, for greed of gain, the shoving and pushing, the striving to get the better of each other, the running about in search of a better place, and above all the sharp, angry squeals of the disappointed ones, formed a perfect minature panorama of the world and the struggling population. One conclusion we reached and that was that those who stood still in one place and said the least, fared the best.

At Coquille we visited the large creamery, saw the separaters, running at almost incredible speed, discharge the cream through one opening and the milk through another, viewed the immense vats of cream ready for churning in the cool of the morning, then into another room to see the huge swinging churns and large vats of delicious butter that was hardening, preparatory to being cut into bricks and enveloped in waxed paper for market. Everything was clean, sweet and cool, the employes politely answered all our questions, and we left well pleased with our visit. We spent a few hours in Coquille while our steeds were getting new shoes, and found it a neat pleasant little city, much larger than we expected to see. While there we renewed our acquaintance and enjoyed a pleasant chat with "ye editor" of the Herald.

From Coquille to Marshfield the road might be termed the way of bridges, as those convenient structures average about one to every quarter of a mile, over marsh, ravine and slough. In one of the marshes we captured a few bulrushes, but most of them were unattainable except with a boat.

All along the way we saw the finest fields of grain, wheat, barley and oats, some of the latter six feet tall and promising an immense yield. Some had been cut and lay in shocks over the field so thick that a wagon could hardly be driven through them, and some was quite green, but tall and luxuriant. The fruit trees were loaded down and in many places broken by the weight of fruit. The gardens were thrifty and if potatoes are to be judged by their tops, there will be no lack of "Irish peaches" in Coos county this winter.

Marshfield is a large, well kept, thriving looking city, albeit a great part of it is on stilts and a large number of the streets are bridges. A noisy, bustling little steamer plying up the slough and the shriek of a locomotive whistle added to the appearance of busy activity.

Empire is beautifully located, and in the right hands would make a lovely resort. We were sorry to see so many pretty, comfortable looking houses empty. There also, stands what was once the largest saw mill on this coast, now given over to the ravages of time and the torredo.

Thence down to Rock Point, which is situated on south slough four miles below Empire, with a distant view of the ocean. Here we found quite a village of pleasure seekers all engaged in the various amusements of the seaside, skiff riding, bathing, clam digging. While there we crossed the slough in a skiff, and leaving our boatman to dig for clams, walked around the end of the slough to where old ocean rolls in majesty and watched the foam crested waves, and listened to the ceaseless thunder of the mighty billows as they broke against the shore and rolled back into the sea. Near the entrance of the channel which they are deepening for a harbor, stands a large white rock called "Fearless Rock." All alone amid the rushing, swirling waters it rises, tall and white like a sentinel, while around its head the sea gulls constantly whirl and scream and the ceaseless boom of the fog horn sounds across the water.

Back again to camp where we essayed for the first time to eat clams. It is fashionable to eat clams at the seaside and so we ate some—to be fashionable.

While in camp our long-eared (mule) team attracted considerable attention, and the suggestion was made that their ears would make good fog horns.

We spent a very pleasant time at Rock Point, and on our return trip made the acquaintance of the pleasant, chatty wife of the light keeper at Point Arago, from whom we received considerable information in regard to light houses in general, and that one in particular.

We reached home well pleased but thoroughly tired with our ride of sixty or seventy miles over the rough roads, and wondering somewhat if our trip would not compare favorably with one of Samantha Allen's "pleasure exertions."

Klondike Nuggets.

(Seattle Times.)

The first discovery of gold on the Klondike was made in the middle of of August, 1896, by George Cormack.

The only way into and out of the Klondike in winter is by way of Juneau.

The steamer which leaves St. Michaels now will reach the Klondike in September.

The only way to live is to imitate the Indians in dress and habit.

It is useless to wear leather or gum boots. Good mocassins are absolutely necessary.

The colder it is the better the traveling. When it is very cold there is no wind, and the wind is hard to bear.

Indian guides are necessary, to go ahead of the dogs and prepare the camp for night.

In summer the sun rises early and sets late, and there are only a few hours when it is not shining directly on Alaska.

In the winter the sun shines for a short time only each day.

Stock can be kept by using care in providing abundantly with feed by ensilage or curing natural grass hay and by housing them in the winter.

It is 1,895 miles from St. Michaels to Dawson City.

Dogs are worth their weight in gold. A good long-haired dog sells for from $150 to $200

By steamer it costs $150 to go from Seattle to Dawson City.

There are two routes by which to reach Dawson City. One by St. Michaels Island and the other via Juneau.

The winter lasts nine months.

In summer the weather is warm and tent life comfortable.

Skates might be used to good advantage at times.

The Yukon river is closed by ice from November to the latter part of May.

On the Klondike the thermometer goes down as low as 60 degrees below zero.

There is a great variety of berries to be found all through the country in summer.

Game is very scarce.

Vegetables of the hardier sort can be raised.

It is 2500 from San Francisco to St. Michaels.

In summer abundance of fine grass can be found near the rivers.

In appearance the natives are like the North American Indians, only more lithe and active, with very small feet and hands.

They live in temporary camps both winter and summer, either in the mountains or on the river, according to the habits of the game they are hunting.

Gold was first discovered in the vicinity of Sitka by Frank Mahony, Edward Doyle and William Dunlay in 1873.

Of the seven trading stations in the Yukon district, five are located upon the river bank.

The first American traders to engage in the Yukon trade were member of the Western Union Telegraph expedition.

With the first breath of spring the up-river people prepare for their annual meeting with their friends from the outside world.

Supplies are purchased chiefly in California and carried from there to St. Michaels.

The Yukon is navigable for a 240 ton steamer for a distance of 1900 miles.

At a distance of 600 miles from the ocean the Yukon river is more than a mile wide.

The Klondike mining region is in the latitude of Iceland and lower Greenland.

The longitude of St. Michaels is farther west than that of Honolulu.

The Wheel of '98.

There are many rumors going the rounds about the wheel of 1898. That it will be chainless nobody doubts. This being the case the recent slump in the price of bicycles is partially explained. It is easy to see why the big firms should be anxious to clear out their stocks in view of a complete change in model. Next year's bicycle will be a $100 article, and will continue to be such for a considerable time. It will be interesting to see how long it will take to make the use of the chainless wheel tolerably general. If the new one differs in appearance, in shape of frame, etc., from that used at present, the rate of adoption will be faster, for the present model will be more readily identified as out of date. In wheels as in clothes, it is not pleasant to be behind the times. But if it is impossible to improve on the present frame in a hurry the adoption of the chainless wheel will be comparatively slow. So long as appearances are all right many persons will be content to use the present article rather than go to the expense of a new one. It is said that a number of trials of the new wheel have been made in secret and that they have been very successful in the matter of speed. Of course the present wheel is rapid enough for the ordinary rider. But it appears that without the chain the friction is decreased enormously and thus ease is promoted. In bicycles, as in battleships, the finished product of today will be obsolete tomorrow. All this makes for progress.—N. Y. Sun.

The Umatilla county court decided to pay the two field deputies of Sheriff Houser the sum of $130 each during the month of September. During this period the officers will be compelled to levy upon the property of delinquent taxpayers, and the expense of traveling about the county will be considerable. It was therefore decided to pay them enough to meet the expenses and allow them a fair compensation for the work.

No Extra Session.

As a result of the rumor of an extra session of the legislature the following question was submitted to Gov. W. P. Lord by a Statesman reporter yesterday:

"It has been rumored that you would call an extra session of the legislature during the coming winter. Is there any truth in such a report?"

The governor replied as follows: "No, there is not. No session would be called now, as the people are too busy with their crops to think of anything in connection with it."

Continuing, the governor said that a session could be called in from fifteen to twenty days, if one was deemed necessary.—Salem Statesman.
