This valley is of historic interest, having been the scene of many conflicts with the Indians in the '50's and many places have been pointed out to us where persons met tragic deaths during those fateful years by the Indians. We were most impressed by the sad fate of Miss Josephine Leland as we stood beneath the giant oak where her body was laid to reet, and our heart went out in pity for the grief and terror of those bereft, who stood on that sad, sad day beside her grave. The old oak tree keeps well the secret of their heartache and desolation as they resumed their journey, and left their dear one in her lonely grave. It is a beautiful tribute to her memory that this county bears her name, and upon the sparkling waters of Grave Creek and at Leland, we see and hear a continual monument to the gentle memory of this

This valley is at present a scene of great activity in its numerous hydraulic mines, quartz ledges and placers. In the last four years there has been several large hydraulic enterprises located here.
